The black shading indicates the areas outside China where "over-seas Chinese" are found in large numbers. John Sung visited most of these areas in the course of his travels, whoning souls for Christ and strengthening the churches.

Foreword

THIS is an honest biography of an extraordinary man. No attempt is made either to conceal or to camouflage the idiosyncrasics and spiritual defects in John Sung's perconality. At first sight it is almost surprising that God should have heen pleased to prosper his ministry so greatly. He had a strong will and a hot temper. He was independent to the point of being sometimes stubborn. A tebel as a boy, he remained an individualist all his life. He could be abrupt and even rude. His wife and family must at times have felt neglected. He was certainly a scholar, with remarkable academic attainments, but his Biblical preaching was never "scholarly" and could be grotesque. His presenting was never schooling and count of greatest present appearance was not particularly preposessing. Everyone noticed a lock of unruly hair falling over his forehead. His dress was simple and his voice harsh.

And yet Mr. Lyall calls him "the greatest evangelist China has ever known". God used him in widening circles of influence throughout Southeast Asia, and caused him to bear fruit which has remained. Members of the Overseas Missionary Followship of the C.I.M., now deployed in Formosa, Indonesia, Thailand. of the C.I.M., now deployed in Formost, maconesis, Maniana. Singapore and Malaya, are constantly meeting Chinese Christians to-day who owe their convention to John Sung's itinerant ministry. Many churches too, given to prayer and preaching to-day, look back to a visit from John Sung as the time when revival came and the fire began to spread.

Is there any explanation of John Sung's great power? Catt any chos be found to the interpretation of this paradoxical figure?

Why did God bring salvation to so many sumers, fulness of life to so many believers and revival to so many churches through his comparatively brief ministry of only fifteen years? Can we learn from his experience what are the conditions of divine blessing? These are the questions one is prompted to ask on reading this striking biography. They are pertinent questions. The study of religious revivals always fascinates the Christian because he is anxious to discover the secrets of power for holiness and service. Some believers, like C. G. Finney, have held that revival can come at any time to any church whenever it is prepared to fulfil the necessary conditions. Other students have detected in the timing of revivals a cermin arbitrariness, suggesting that the sovervigin Lord brings revival not just when the Church is pleased to desire it but when He is pleased to give it. Certainly the spiritual movement associated with the name of John Sing came just when the Chinese Church ucceled to be quickened and screngtheued to meet its present fiery ordeal. At the same time it cannot have been altogether independent of the character and work of John Sing binself.

When D. L. Moody died, Dr. R. A. Toney whose a searching hooklet emitled, Why God med D. L. Moody, giving seven reasons. To-day Christian people are asking, "Why is God so signally blessing Billy Graham?" This book will make every reader ask, "Why did God honour the orinistry of John Sung?" Every reader will reach his own conclusions, but it is particularly interesting to notice four outstanding features of Dr. John Sung's character and ministry which are also to be found in those of Dr. Billy Graham.

Firstly, John Sung was a dedicated man. This is the theme upon which Mr. Lyall has rightly laid emphasis. He has seen in John Sung an illustration of James Denny's words, "There must be great remunitations if there are to be great Christian careers". John Sung's feet may often have slipped, but his heart was fixed. He knew what it was to deny himself and follow Christ. To him the Cross was not just to be embraced, but to be shouldered. It was not only an escape from sin and death through Another's crucifixion, but a challenge to the crucifixion of himself. No one can fail to be moved by the painful struggle which led him finally to turn his back on a career of academic distinction, to throw the symbols of his beilliance into the sea and to resist the attempts even of his patents to make him recant. He was no seeker of faine and no lover of money. He had no bunger for popularity. He hated flattery. He might often have said to his congregations as Billy Graham says nightly in his crusades, "Yon haven't come to see a man". If his pulpit and platform style was sensational, it was always to enforce the truth and never to advertise lumself. Like his Master before him, he sought not his own glory. He was willing to be a fool for Chitis's sake. He was quite fearless. Indeed his apparent rudeness was certainly at times a fierce means of self-protection. He desired to live unto God only and was alarmed by the plaudits of the crowd. He was on fitte for God, "a living flame of gospel zeal". He never spared himself, He travelled tens of thousands of milrs and preached to hundreds of thousands of people. He rose early and ate simply. He would go on preaching until his clothes were wet with perspiration, and would ignore the pain of his illness, resolved if possible to die on the platform.

God needs Christian workers of this calibre to-day. So much of our service is vitiated by secret self-seeking. We want to gain a reputation for isuccessful evangelism. We want our mission or society or church to be honoured. We thrive on the praise of men, and wilt when we lose it. We are fired with worldly ambitions. We crave power and popularity and distinction.

John Sung loved God and souls. That was all.

Secondly, John Sing knew the place of power. He had remarkable natural gifts of mind and personality, but he did not reply upon these for effect. He had learned what St. Poul reaches in 1 Cor. i. 17 oi., 5. that there is power in the Word of God, the Cross of Christ and the Holy Spinit. He also knew in his own experience the great power of prayer. Tremendous spiritual power is, in fact, generated when all these four secrets are combined and the word of the Cross is preached in the Holy Spirit and with prayer. Certainly John Sung's message was the word of the Cross. He loved the Bible. Ever since his sojourn in an American mental home, when he began to devour it avidly, the Bible was Sung's daily food. He would read about a dozen chapters every day and soak his heart and mind in their divine teaching. Indeed, he read nothing else except the daily newspaper, it was for this reason that he was able so effectively to employ his favourite method of expounding whole chapters and even books at a time. It is true that his preaching was sometimes fanciful (especially in his use of allegory), but it was always biblical. Even if in some details it was peculiar, it was comprehensive and wonderfully balanced, and it always centred on the Cross. It was usually accompanied by some striking actions and dramatic gestures, but it was in the power of the Spirit. It was also bathed in prayer. He preached for a verdict, but he prayed for one as well. His prayer life was disciplined. He would rise at 4 a.m. or 5 a.m. daily, and his intercessory prayer was amazingly systematic as he worked through lists of converts whose names were usually illustrated by photographs.

Dogmatic expository preaching is a crying need in the churches to-day. The word of the Crosi is still the power of God and the wisdom of God. The gospel of Christ is still the power of God unto salvation. The Holy Spirit still demonstrates in the constitute of the heaters simple words stannard in human weakness. God still answers prayer.

Thirdly, Joins Sung was real. I have no doubt that what impressed the people and captured the press during the Greater London Crusade was the carnest sincerity of its chief figure. Now John Sung may have been rude, but he too was real. There was in him no trace of the humbing. Like Jesus he loathed hypocrisy. He never hesitated to denounce with scathing candout the hellow mockery of nominal Christianity in people and paster alike. He learned from John Wesley that the first mark of revival was a conviction of sin and "a thorough confession of sin", and he looked for both. He was quite fearless in his exposme of human sio, and was even known occasionally to point out individuals in the congregation, to their great emban assment but for the furtherance of blessing. He played the part of John the Baptist in his fierce rebulkes, and was particularly outspoken in his condemnation of ministers who were preaching another gospel or contradicting the truth by their lives. Not was he satisfied with demunication. His preaching was always practical. He sought to expose sin in order that it should be confessed and forsaken. He invisted that sinners seeking salvation should make restitution wherever possible and put wrong relationships right.

Phatisaism also haunts the churches of the West. It is a grucsome spectre. It is a spirit which invades us all at times. We need to be on our guard. It ruins true religion, for reality is an indispensable condition of God's blessing. We must be more honest before God, more open with each other and more real in ourselves if we are to expect God to use us.

Fourthly, John Sung worked through the churches. He may have been of an independent temperament himself. He may have heen an individualist. But he never lost sight of the corporate nature of Christianity. Being unhampered by denominationalism, he went wherever the churches invited him. He worked with them and through them. Wherever he went, he left behind him not only converted Christians but revived churches. "Numerous baptisms followed Dr. Sung's departure." "The church as a whole had experienced revival." These are typical statements in Mr. Lyall's natrative. One of the most interesting features of his work was the organization of converts into poraching bands, cach usually composed of three people, pledged to go out at least once a week for Christian witness. At Hangchow "50 preaching bands were formed". At Foodhow "96 new preaching hands were formed." "In Amoy and Kulangsu 147 preaching bands were organized." In Singapore "luftway through the campaign . . . 11 evangelistic teams consisting of 3 persons or more were organized, with a total membership of 503". In Taichung and Tainan dollars and jewellery were given support of the 295 evangelistic hands that were formed". Not content with this activity, John Sung arranged conventions, Bible Institutes and schools for the inspiration, and instruction of helievers, longing that they should be holy and effective through the fulness of the Holy Spirit.

God raised up John Sung to blaze a trail. But thousands followed after. He knew that evangelism was not a work only for the ordained minister or even for the experienced Clinistian. The New Testament makes every believer, however young and immature, a writters and a sonl-winner. China could not be evangelized by John Sung, or even by a dozen such men, but only by the active writters of every Christian. God's purpose is that every local Christian congregation should be organized for writters as well as for worship, and that every single Christian should have a share in the work. What is true for China is true for England also, and for every country. "To the whole Church and to every member of it belongs the duty and privilege of spreading the good news of the Kingdom of God and the message of salvation through Jesus Chust" (from the Constitution of the Church of South India).

Perhaps we are experiencing in the West through Dr. Billy Graham what came to the churches of the East recently through Dr. John Sing. But we should be making a sad mistake if we supposed that power for effective service was available only for a few giants like them. God's transforming power is at the disposal of all who will pay the price and by faith embrace it. We need therefore to ponder carefully the qualities of the worker whom God blesses and the character of the work which He prospers.

Preface

N August 18th, 1944, just before his forty-third birthday John Sung finished his course. The ten years which intervene have provided ample evidence that his work lives on in lives redeemed and in chutches revived through his ministry. In the remarkable life story of this great Chinese evangelist there seemed to be a message for the churches of the West.

When the task of composing a biography was put in hand, only the most fragmentary material was available. An appeal was sent out through the pages of The Millions, and there was a widespread response from Chinese and missionaries who had known Dr. Smg, or been present during his campaigns. University amborities in the United States were co-operative in affording the facts about Dr., Smg's schebastic career. Dr. Sung's own publication, entitled My Testimony, was the bastsof the scory in Part One. A manuscript continuation of this autobiographical matter came to hight at the last moment and supplemented the story in some detail up to 1934. The annual reports of the Bethel Mission afforded much valuable information. Most of the facts about Dr. Sung's two visits to the Netherland East Indies (Indonesia) were obtained from a booklet entitled Dr. Sung, Een Réveil op Java, by Miss C. Bau bé, or from articles in Dutch magazines, kindly provided by Dr. H. D. J. Boissevain, former Secretary of the Dutch Mission Study Council.

But Dr. Sung's personal journals and the material dietated in Peking before his death to his intimate friends, which would have been the main source of information, remain out of reach in China. A Chinese biography has long been contemplated, but has not yet appeared. The present story has therefore bern pieced together with great difficulty, and the result is far from being a complete picture. There are considerable gaps in the story—as, for example, the details of Dr. Sung's visits to Butma and Sumatra. The chronology of the story after 1934 is sometimes uncertain and may in some instances be faulty. But the slow processes of research could not continue indefinitely. This story from the East, incomplete as it is, is now presented in the belief that it will make its own special challenge to the Christians of the West, standing, as many think, on the threshold of revival.

Prologue

As usual, the summer rains had washed out the mud roads carved out of the loess chifs of the Fon River Valley. Bus traffic was halted until the weather changed and the roads dried up. So the departure of the fired team of preachers at the conclusion of their campaigus in South Shansi was delayed.

conclusion of their campaigns in South Shansi was delayed.

Di John Sung, the illustrious member of the team, impatient at the delay, angrily rated the Bus Station manager for the non-arrival of the bus and then shurped down like a coolie by the roadside to wait. Thrue had just been a week of the most powerful preaching Hungtung had ever heard. Delegates from all over the district attended the conference and witnessed a rare manifestation of the Holy Spirit's power. The Bethel Band had paid a previous visit to the province but this was Dr. Sung's first time in Hungtung. Speaking by interpretation and switching from one dialect to another (and even to English when he wanted to drive home his point to the missionaties) he preached one day on the revival in point to the missionaries) he presented one day on one revival in Samaria, comparing the failure of Philip's ministry to the failure of the work of the missionaries, despite the spectacular reports which reached Jeusalem—and the home consumency, in missionary magazines. The one thing essential in missionary work was lacking-the power of the Holy Spirit. Another time, the perilous times of which Paul warned Timothy were compared to waves threatening to swamp the church's little boat, and with each new wave drawn on the blackboard the preacher would leap into the air and land on the thin board of the platform covering the baptistry with a thunderous noise until the audience feared lest the next leap would see the preacher disappear. The closing address described the fluctuations in Jairus' faith and compared them to the rise and fall of a patient's temperature, and depicted them on the blackboard in the form of a chart. And we sang one of the preachet's popular charuses, "Don't trust men, don't look at circumstances, but put your trust in the Lord alone". That morning at the Bus Station, it looked as if John Sung's faith had fallen to zero.

Missionary hospitality during these remarkable meetings was brusquely refused and the best efforts of the Chinese leaders to provide warm entertainment coldly received. The Chinese were as perplexed as the missionaries, But thry recognized that here was a man with no time for social niceties, his whole heart and mind being absorbed in his task. And God honoured this devotion and ponred our His blessing. One unforgettable day, the platform was crowded with both missionaries and Chinese Christians all confessing their conscious failure and seeking the Spirit's power. Missionaries were growing accustomed to watching Chinese Christians kneel in penitence at convention meetings but hitherto rhey themselves had held back. Now the barriers of pride were swept away and Englishmen and Americans knelt by the side of their Chinese brethren in a common need. The revival which was already on the way received a tremendous impetus and was to continue and grow in momentum during the coming years, preparing the Shausi church to survive the long trials which lay ahead. Many a life was cleansed and transformed as a result of the ministry of this unusual servant of God.

In 1885, Edwin Joshua Dukes, a Church Missionary Society missionary to Fukien Province wrote: "One needs to be a Chinese in order to think as a Chinese, and to use such illustrations and references and phrases as will make public speech effective... China will never be converted through the lips of the foreigner... Not thousands of Englishmen or Americans are needed, but thousands and rons of thousands of Chinese with consectated lips and hearts. Not so much scholars as men are needed, but it is the man that is needed, to be trave, true-hearted, consecrated man who can stand alone... It is time to look for China's apostle. He has not yet given signs of his coming. When the apostle comes, he will be a Chinese and not a foreigner. Will he come out of one of the theological colleges or will he come from some intexpected quarter, as God's ambassadors often do?

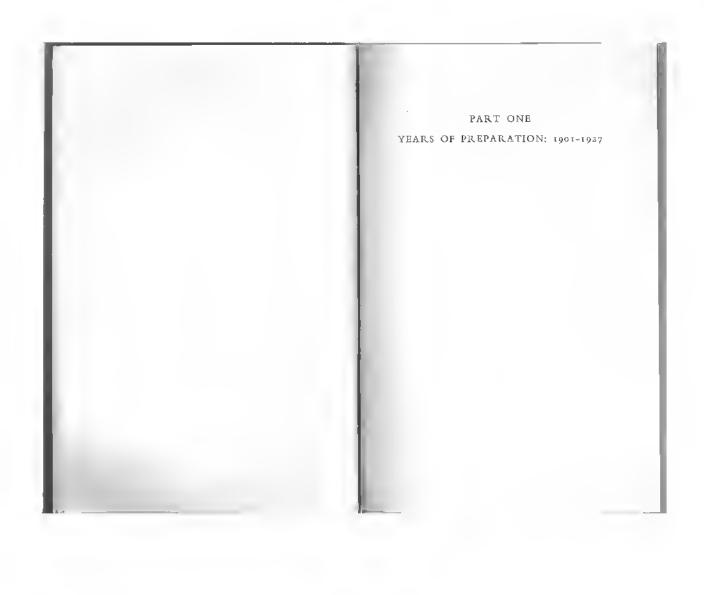

We cannot tell; but may be come soon! and may be shake the nation as did the Baptist in the desert!"

China had to wait for many years for its spostle. And when he came, what an unusual character he was! A flaming evangelist, but a man uncouth in appearance and scenning to lack the ordinary Christian graces. A scholar and a scientist of the highest academic attainments, but a man whose simple gospel sermons never bore a trace of erudition or display of learning. A man who persistemly alvocated the custom of family worship, yet who would faun have remained single himself and who found little joy in family life. Noisy and acrobatic and full of humour on the platform, but silent and almost morose off it. Owing much to missionaries and other foreigners, but so critical of them and so off-hand with them that many regarded him as anti-foreign. Denouncing sin vehicusently wherever he found it, but able as no one else to move audiences with the message of God's love. A born organizer and leader who resisted the temptation to found a new organization of his own. A man greatly beloved, yet greatly hated; birteely criticized, yet utterly careless of criticism. Such was the greatest evangelist China has ever known.

Like John the Baptist, John Sung died in his prime. His active ministry was limited to fificen years. And yet within that time he shook the Church in China and South-east Asia. His convers were numbered in tens of thousands. In several countries the Chinese churches survived the war with Japan solely because of the work of John Sung, to whom most of the spiritual life which flows through them can be traced.

In every province of China and among the overseas Chinese communities in the islands of the South China Sea, in the U.S.A., in the West Indies, in Great Britain, and wherever Chinese Chinisians are to be found, the enquiring traveller will discount that very many leaders in the Church to-day were either converted or had their lives greatly changed in the campaigns conducted by this extraordinary servant of God.

I HAVE an impression that a great deal of what is called "interest" in the church it artificial, and that when it comes to the point of doing anything it is exceedingly difficult to get it done. The Protestant Church has perhaps taught too exclusively the duty of consecrating to God the life we are born note, and left too fittle room for the truth that in this present evil world there must be great remediations as well if there are to be great Christian enters. There is infinitely more talking about missions among young people than there used to be, much more knowledge, too, and more of what are supposed to be ideas; but the Student Volunteer Movement has fostered this, Iquestion if it has increased by an aroun the kind of curbustassin which has the sense of duty in it, and which will materialize in self-dealal. I hope I am not unkind to anyone in saying this. Unhappily, I think there is reason. region,

JAMES DENNY, D.D. From a letter to Sir W. Robertson Nicol, 1910.

CHAPTER ONE

Childhood 1901-1909

HB village of Hong Chek in the prefecture of Hinghwa. Fukien Province, in South-east China, lies in a green valley of paddy fields within a rim of tree-covered and flower-decked mountains. It was there that, on September 27th, 1901, a sixth child came to the home of Pastor Sung, a minister in the Methodist Church.

The unborn babe had already been dedicated to God's service and, as this was the first child to be born since Mrs. Sung's conand, as this was the birst clitid to be boin since Mis. Sing's con-version, he was named Ju-uu ("God's Giace"). The appearance of the baby was, however, strange. The head was unusually large and the lower part of the face small. This, with the dark-rolouted skin, caused father Sung to take a diclike to the child. Moreover, she baby had anived at a time when the family was passing through one of its periods of greatest poverty and this catta mouth to fred at such a time was not enurely welcome.

Pastor Sing was the youngest of four brothers who in 1886 had started a church in their village. They were all young men at the time and had only recently embraced Christianity.

"Use a toors in my home for the services," said one brother.

A second had a Gospel of Matthew and could read.

"Let me read the lessons on Sundays!" was his contribution.

The third brother's part was to lead in prayer.

"Fourth Brother has 'mouth ability' (cloquence)," the three older brothers decided. "He can be our preacher, even though he is only sixteen!"

The brothers decided that the youngest brother should be sent to the Foochow Theological College to study for the ministry, and in due course he made the long journey to the capital, travelling on foot over tree-covered mountains and along verdant valleys. Their terraced and well-irrigated slopes were a patchwork of rich colours in the harvest sunshine. Above him, beyond the line of cultivation, uncouland and purple heather merged into the grey and purple pile of gratite took which thrust itself four thousand feet into the clouds.

The time at Foochow was one of spiritual struggle, but it was there that the young man finally came into a living experience of Christ through the new birth after two barren years of study. After his graduation, "Mr. Sung Fourth Brother" returned to the Hughwa district to commence a louely ministry of faithful and mnemitting toil among the farming folk of his own hills and valleys.

Hinghwa in Putien County had always been a great stronghold of Buddhism, and the first challenge to the powers of darkness there was made in 1862. A young catechist of the Church Missionary Society preached the Gospel, and in 1887 there came into being the first httle church. In 1890, this church was handed over to the American Methodist Episcopal Mission. As Dr. Brewster of that mission crossed from Foochow into the district of Hinghwa, he stopped, and looking over the country he vowed: "Here I will know nothing but Jesus Christ and Him crucified," It was in association with this mission that Pastor Song served God all his life.

Seven years after his graduation, Pastor Sung was married to a member of a family of ardent Buddhists to whom he had beru betrothed before his bitth. The wedding, however, was a Christian one, though it was years before Mrs. Sung came to share her hesband's Christian faith. This took place following the still birth of her fifth child and her own temackable restoration after everyone had despaired of her life.

While Paster Sing travelled widely and putstied his pasteral ministry, Mrs. Sung laboured on their little family farm where tice was grown to supplement the inadequate family income. There were many hard struggles as the family grew. After the birth of the first child, a girl, Paster Sung had been sorely tempted to give up his arduous and normumerative life as a country preacher and exchange it for the less precarious life of a scholar in the city. But as he knelt in prayer early one morning he seemed to hear a voice from the Lord saying to him on the whispering herery:

Trust in the Lord with all thine heart and lean not onto thine own understanding.

My servant, fear not, you have Me! I already know your need!
Rebuked and repentant, he told his wife of his experience and never again looked back.

Fukien is a province of spectacular beauty. Mountains rising to 8,000 feet separate it from the rest of China and send out spurs across the province and into the South China Sea in the shape of bold promontories. Gorges of exquisite grandem break the outline of the ridges from whitch numerous streams tush down to the sea. Strange rocks like gigantic statues of men and animah appear to crown the mountain summits. Access to the province from the neighbouring province of Kiaogsi is by river through the celebrated natural gates formed by the high cliffs on either bank. The valleys are carpted with the emerald green of the paddy fields and the hill slopes covered with the tas bushes which have given fame to the province and formerly attracted the tea clippres to the ports of Foochow and Amoy. The coast is dotted with intumerable rocky islands.

The people of Fukien bear a resemblance to their landscape. They are more tough and vigorous than the people of the northern plains. These living inland where the peaks are highest have become energetic and daring through their long struggle with the difficulties and dangers of that rugged region. Neares the coast, the people seem to combine the qualities of the mountaineer and the mainer. Such were the men of Sung.

Pastor Sing had been a man of hasty temper and his son soon showed that he had inherited a similar temperament. As the child grew to boyhood there were constant clashes between him and his father. The bamboo rod was used freely until the child's undisciplined soul would rebel and seek ways to vent his anger on his parents.

Once, in a fir of rage, the lad butted his head against one of the carthenware water-jars standing in the courtyard and it fell to pieces? On another occasion, the two little brodiers were sitting in the courtyard eating their beakfast rice when a quartel started and Ju-in threw his hot rice into his brother's face in anger, scalding him and breaking the bow!! Terrified of the caning he was sure would follow, the culprit decided to jimp down the well—a popular Chinese way to spite the family! But he could not get the cover off in time, so instead he hid under a bed all day long while his parents conducted an anxious and vain search. At eight he came out of his hidding place and duly received the whipping he deserved. His father then disappeared into the little study whose walls were lined with a library of paper-backed books. Peeting through a crack in the door young Sung was ansazed to see his father, with his head in his hands, weeping. This was unbearable and rushing in the lad burst out, "What's the matter with yon? You whip me. I don't cry; but you cry! Why is this?" To which the only reply was: "God's love can be compared to the love of a father."

It spite of such clashes of temperament, the home seemed to have been a happy one on the whole. Ju-un was the second of six sons, and there were four older daughters in the family. Life for this large family of children took an even course. There were many joyful days spent on the hills among the flowers and birds or fishing in the streams. There was beauty everywhere. Taught to regard all this as God's handiwork, the children received indelible impressions of the power of the Creator.

About 1907, Pastor Sung was appointed Assistant Principal of the Methodist Bible School in Hinghwa and the whole family moved into the city to live. Ju-un, now five or six years of age, began to go to Sunday School, and his intelligent and impressiontable young thind was so fascinated by the stories and illustrations be heard that he found it easy to retain them in his memory, and years later they were the store from which he drew for his own sermon illustrations. His teacher loved and understood children and was above all a true believer who expressed a strong influence on his scholars.

At the church Day School, young Sung soon showed signs of exceptional ability. This pleased his father, for few of his other children, to young Sung's disgust, soon gave him the trick-name of "Big Head." As his head was seldous shaved in the manner of Chinese boys, it was usually covered with a mop of black hair, some of it flopping over his eyes, making his head appear even larger than it really was. He was a perfectly natural, healthy boy, full of fun and daring, and many a time his parents had cause to thank God for His protecting care over this fively youngster of theirs.

Their suddenly a great sortow came to the Sung family. Ju-un arrived home from school one evening to find his patents weeping over the dead form of his youngest sister. As he clasped her cold hand in his, he was, for the first time, brought face to face with the mystery of deadh.

"Where does mail go to after death?" he asked.

"To Jesus!" was the seply. But it did not quite satisfy him and the frar of death continued to cause him nightmates for a long time to come.

The coffic in which the body of his sister was placed to be busied on the lonely hillside seemed to his young mind to be the

CHAPTER, TWO

The Hinghwa Revival

"DLEASE pray for revival in Hinghwa!" was the plea to some friends in America from one of the missionaries in Hinghwa. Two elderly ladies took up this appeal and prayed through to an assurance that there would be a quickening work of the Holy Spirit in the Hinghwa church. They received an assurance that this work would begin on Good Friday and they wrote to their friend in China to tell her so. But the letter was delayed and only arrived after Easter. Sure enough, however, the revival had already broken out—and it was on Good Friday that this had happened!

The preacher on that morning had earned no reputation as an evangelist of any extraordinary grits. But he was a consecrated man and one whom God could safely use. As he told the story of the Saviour's passion, he himself broke down and began to weep, realizing as never before his own sinfulness. Conviction spread to the whole congregation and soon everyone was on his face before God confessing his sin. Reconcibation and restitution followed. People who had been enemies for years became friends. A purified church became a wirnessing church and within a month or two there were 3,000 conversions, Many new chapels were built throughout the district and the churches of Hinghwa were lifted out of their former coldness and formality on to a new place of Christian experience. This was the first time that revival had ever come to this rhurch.

Jit-tin was present that Gnod Friday morning and he could never, all his life long, forget that sermon, its theme was: "Jesus in the Garden of Gethscusare". The preacher graphically described the scene: the agony of the Saviour and His obedience muto death, in contrast with the sleeping Peter and the other disciples. In His darkest hom, the Saviour could find no sympathy from those who were His nearest friends. The fearlessness of Jesus in the face of His captures contrasted strongly with the treachery of Judas and the cowardice of the disciples who forsook I lim and fled.

The words of the preacher were like sharp arrows in the hearts of his hearts, who saw themselves portrayed only too clearly in Peter and Judas and the rest. They wept with remotes and the grief of true repentance. Among the mourtners was Pastor Sung's little nine-year-old son. His bitter teats, he tells us, soaked litrough the lapel of his coat. The events of that Good Friday were so evidently the work of the Holy Spirit that services had to be continued, and day after day men and women songht relief in tearful confession from their builden of sin. Hearts were cleansed and lives were changed by the hundred in those wonderful days.

John Sung liked to attribute his first experience of the new birth to his great spiritual crisis in America many years later. But there seems to be little question, judging from all the evidence, that God began a good work in his fift at the age of nine. If it is true dat no man can call Jenns Lotd except by the Holy Ghost, then undoubtedly the boy became a son of God by faith about this time. His life was soon marked by an exceptional love for the Word of God, an unusual desire to pray and a passion to preach which could scattely be the fruits of an unregenerate nature. It was a feature of the general revival of more recent years to call in question all eather experiences and to confine the putting away of sin from the life with the new birth. Even after John Sung's spiritual crisis in America, he once came to the front in a meeting led by Rev. Andrew Gih after an address on the new hinth. It was not clear why. One can only suppose that there was some doctrinal confission which made him discount that evident work of grace in his heart at the time of the Hinghwa teceval.

The news of the revival in Hinghwa spread far and wide and brought people from all over Pukien, even from the large cities of Amoy and Foochow, to see what was taking place and to share in the grace which was being so abundantly provided. Delegates even came from America to see this extraordinary work of the Spirit which became known as the "Hinghwa Pentecost". The chapel became too small to accommodate the crowds and a tent to hold three to four thousand people was erected. Few went away without having met with God in a new way. What impressed Ju-un was that all this should be the result of the prayers of Christians in America. Those exciting and glorious days remained throughout his life the happiest memories of his childhood. After he became a fumous preachet himself, it was always his prayer that the Holy Spirit of Pentecost might so rest ou him that wherever he went the parched soil of many heart; might become like gardens in spring-time after the refreshing showers, just as in those memorable days in Hinghwa.

Pastor Sung was among those who experienced a fresh infilling of the Spirit at this time. The need for more prayer for his own family and for the church became a burden, and early every morning he used to climb a neighbouring hill-top to be alone with God. His young son would follow him and, praying with his father, he learned to pray himself. Prayer became very real to the lad and he experienced many answers to prayer. Communion with God became a joy, and hoth rogether shared the secrets of the Father's presence.

It was not long after the end of the revival meetings that Pastoa Sing became seriously ill with asthma, the result of a chill contracted in a storm when he was travelling home from Foochow. As death cast its dark shadow over the home, Mrs. Sing, too grief-stricken to pray for herself, said to her somowful little son;

"Dou't cry! Quickly go and pray for your father! Prayer will be answered!"

In his desolation, the little lad went to his room and pouted out his heart for his father. Prayer was immediately answered; the father made a speedy recovery, and had no further recurrence of this complaint. How the family rejoiced at this signal answer to prayer! Ju-un could never doubt that God was both willing and able to hear the prayer of faith and to heal the sick, Even a later period of scepticism and backsliding failed to destroy the belief in the efficacy of prayer which this and similar experiences had given him.

Born again in a revival, with the godly, praying example of his father always before him and with such outstanding experiences of God's intervention in human circumstances, it is little wonder that John Sung was such a man of prayer to his

CHAPTER THREE

The Little Paster

"ERE comes the 'little pastor'! It's his turn to preach to-day!" This became a familiar cry around the Hinghwayillages about the year 1913. Pastor Sung was by then the senior city pastor in charge of a very large work which included, in addition to the church itself, an orphanage, two Bible Schools for men and for women respectively and boys' and gills' ligh schools. Ninety pen cent. of the scholars were from Christian homes, and there was scarcely a village where it was not possible to gather a few Christians together for a time of followship and prayer, perhaps in a home or perhaps in a temple room.

Such was the effect of the "Hinghwa Pentecost". This movement had not been ephemeral, but marked the beginning of a period of wonderful progress and rapid growth in the church. Every Sunday country Christians poured into the city, some coming over the mountains from long disances to worship. The original chapel became far too small and there had to be three morning services. "The World of God increased and the number of the disciples in Jerusalem multiplied greatly." It is always so when the power of the Holy Spirit is thus liberated. A large new chapel was evenually built and the Christians of Hinghwa had favour with God and man.

It was under these circumstances that the young high school lad found bimself drawn into the work of the church as his father's unofficial juntor assistant. His name was included among the local preachers and he had a place on the circuit plan. His energy was treless and it was his great delight to accompany his father to the villages on his preaching trips, Should his father be prevented from fulfilling an engagement, his young son was only too glad to substitute. His retentive mind remembered sermons he had heard and with the store of illustrations gathered in Sunday School he found no difficulty in composing good Scriptural sermons which, in the early days, he used to read with great composure. God used His own Word to the conversion of men and women. Open-rir preaching, giving out tracts, selling Bibles, conducting the singing: all these he loved. Though still a schoolboy, he was never happier than in his tole as the "little pastor".

But Ju-un was discovering, like many another young person, that it was easier to appear an earnest Christian away from home than to live a consistent Christian life among his own family. There were still fits of bad temper, exhibitions of prinle and selfish habits unconquered. Pastor Sung did not feel that his son was suited to the ministry, and decided to launch him on a naval

The currance examination for the Fukien Naval College was to be held at Foochow, 400 miles to the north over rough mountain roads. Young Sinig had no fearful anticipations of finitive, lowever many the competitors. Was he not an unisually good scholar with a good physique? Was he not always head of his class to the enery of some of his rivals who assured him that he worked too hard and would one day work himself to death? And did not his teachers assure him of success?

However, "Man proposes but God disposes". As the time for the long journey in the steps of his father long ago drew near, the lad became ill and his legs were so swollen that he should never have attempted the journey. But sheer dogged determination forced him over the long trail, only to render his physical condition on arrival so poor that he failed to pass the medical examination. And when it came to the essay, he failed in this too. The subject was "The princely man does not strive"—a statement from Confficius. Though he failed, God used his thinking on this subject to teach him a lesson in humility. And, moreover, God had other plans for young Sung than a naval career and it was lie who closed the door to the fulfillment of this ambition.

Back at school, Ju-un gave himself diligently to his studies.

In fact, he had no time for the political activities in which the average schoolboy was engaging with patriotic fervour. Those were the days of rising anger against Japan following the notorious Twenty-one Demands and the Washington Conference. Sung believed he could serve his country best by studying hard, and he was content to be ostracized for an apparent lack of patriotism. He was, however, editor of the weekly school newspaper, though his iterary bent was used to better putpose when he became assistant editor of his father's magazine Revitad, which had a wide circulation. Sung was a great reader and loved books and this task appealed to him gready. Many an hour did he spend in his father's study reading the latest acquisitions to the library there, It was also about this time (1917) that he began systematically to write a journal or diary, a habit which he kept up all the rest of his life.

During the holidays and in all his spare time. Sing gave first place to the preaching of the gospel. One summer he held a reading class for a hundred illiterate country children and taught them to read the Bible. Amother summer, be held an evangelistic campaign in a village and fifty or sixty people were converted. Thus the "hele pastor's" reputation grew by leaps and bounds.

But school-days were drawing to an end. The schoolboys of those days were not the smart young fellows one sees to-day in Western dress or school milform, but bare-headed, bure-footed youngsters who paid little attention to their personal appearance. The Sung family had no extra cash for luxuries and Ju-tin himself, being a book-worm, was not fastidious about his dress. But the promise of a new blur grown for Graduation Day spurred him on, and he was gracified to find his name at the top of the list of graduation students. So ou Graduation Day at Mentorial High School young Sung wore his new gown for the first time as he went up to receive his diploma. This gown went with him on all his subsequent travels in China and was worn on all special occasions.

Sung had planned to take the entrance examination to Ginling University in Nanking after finishing at high school. All the necessary preparations for the journey had been completed when his cldest sister dird quite suddenly. Once again, Ju-tur was runinded of the uncertainty of life and, for the time being, he lost all ambition to continue his studies. The journey to Nanking was never taken. Instead, he became the chief editor of Revival and with this combined continuous village preaching. He used to organize bands of high school boys to take turns in visiting the village schools to hold services for the children. Such was their ceal that they would sometimes implement their passionate dictunciations of idolatry by breaking down the idols in the Buddhist temples and then hacking off their hands and feet!

Despite all this ard and activity, young Sung's heart was not completely satisfied. He was not living a fully viccorious life and the work he was doing he described as "spectacular as the blue of a kingfisher's feather, abundant as summer foliage, but without a single plucking of fresh fruit to offer to the Lord Jesus".

CHAPTER FOUR

Student Days in America 1919-1923

"ATHER, I have decided that I want to go to America to study!" Old Pastor Sung was at first too taken aback to speak. Then the indignant protest poured out:
"Don't think that I have money carned by the sweat of my

"Don't think that I have money carned by the sweat of my brow for you to go and spend, eating foreign ink and filling your head with wind! Who do you think I am? Don't forget that your father is not the mandarin of Hinghwa, but a poor preacher!"

The year 1919 was one of deep turnest in China. The Versailles Peace Conference of 1919 had disillusioned China and given rise to bitter anti-foreign sentiment. The high-handed and direatening attitude of Japan was also creating intense hatred in China for her eastern neighbour. The student world was in a ferment and strikes were frequent in schools all over the country to demand this and that from the Government. Young Sung, now eighteen years of age and ambitious to attain the highest honours, realized that in a Chinese university he would not be able, in those troublous times, to pursue his studies minterrupted. It was for this reason that he had made the great decision to join some other young men from his home town who were planning to continue their studies in the U.S.A. Nothing daunted by the rebuilf from his patent, young Sung resorted to his trysting place on the hill, where he rold his Heavenly Father of his desire to study in America and afterwards to serve Him in China as a preacher of the Gospel. For a whole week he cried to God to open the way.

Then, one day, a letter arrived from Peking. From whom could it be? He opened it and, to his amazement, it was from an American lady missionary and contained a promise to secure for him entrance into Ohio Wesleyan University with free tutton!

She also promised to make arrangements for his board and lodging. Armed with this letter, which seemed to him a sufficiently convincing argument, he again approached his father in high spirits. But old Pastor Sung was unmoved.

"All very well, but who is going to pay your fare to America? In thirty years in the ministry I have not saved enough money to buy you even a one-way ticket—even if I wanted to?"

So back to his hill-top went the young man, and again prayer was heard. Many of Pastor Sung's former students in the Bible School were now in the ministry themselves, and when they heard about the situation they began to send in gifts in varying amounts. Young Sing made a careful record of each one, fully intending to repay them all as soon as possible. There was a grand total of over $500. And when the American gold dollar studdenly fell in value to 95 Chinese cents, Sung had more than enough to buy his ticket to America, with something over to purchase a simple outfit of Western-style suits and clothing, Pastor Sung gave his grudging consent to the proposal and plans went shead.

There was a final hitch when it was discovered that Sung had truchoma! This would have barred his entry into the United States, so he immediately started the painful copper sulphate treatment while praying earnestly for healing. One day, while he was having his hair cut the barber noticed his eyes and offered to give him the traditional treatment for which Chinese barbers have long had a reputation. Sung consented. With a bone instrument—doubtless unsterilized!—the barber scraped the cyclids and washed out the eye. This was repeated several times at short intervals and complete healing resulted. Sung thus had fresh confirmation that God was hearing prayer and had removed the last obstacle in the way of his going to America.

The day of departure arrived—February 10th, 1920. He was to travel with seven companions. His father was away from home at the time and his heavy-hearted mother handly looked up from her work to say "Goodbye." His brother and some friends esconted him to the wharf and saw him safely on board the little coasting steamer. He felt this passing from home keenly, though he linde knew that it would be seven years before he was to see his parents again.

Sung was the only Christian in lus party. In Shanghai, the others spent the time waiting for their boat 10 America in a round of gaiery. They had money to spend. Sung, having no money to spend, scarcely stirred from his botel, even to visit the huge department stores on Nanking Road where his hotel was. He spent the two weeks of waiting quietly, following his normal daily routine, Bible reading and prayer, reading the newspapers and writing up his diary, and miffered much ridicule from the other young men in consequence.

On March and, the S.S. Nile sailed Sung had a comfortable cabin to himself and thoroughly enjoyed his first experience of such luxury. He did not even go ashote with the others at the Sandwich Islands, but continued his strict daily discipline. Noticing what a place the writing up of the daily diary had in his life, the other Chinese students contrived to steal the precional little book and he never saw it again, to his keen disappointment. Life was made as miserable as possible for him by the others in his party. And there were no regrets when Sung saw the last of them after the ship lad docked at San Francisco on March 22nd.

But now a great sense of londiness overcame the new arrival. His English was poor and he was largely ignorant of Western manners and customs. To make matter worse, he found on atrival in Delaware during April that the missionary who had promitted to be of assistance to him was still in Peking! This was a great blow to a stranger in a strange land.

But his first thoughts were for those who had made it possible for him to travel to America. He now had $246 in his possession, so, keeping only $6 for himself, he tetumed the balance to his father at the first opportunity. The Chinese dollar equivalent of this sum was enough to refund all his kind friends for the $500 they had collected for him!

The Registrar of Ohio Wesleyan University set Sung's mind at test about his fees, and "Siong-Ceh Sung" was soon enrolled as a student. But it was hard to see where he was to ruise $1 a day to pay for his board. With only $6 in his pocker, the situation was desprtate. He set off to look for lodgings and to find ramployment immediately. So soou was this young visito from China facing the hard realities of life! This was hardly what he had expected, but the experience cast him much on God and brought out those qualities which were 50 typical of the man.

His first job was as a shop-cleaner at 25 cents an hour! Later, during the summer months, he obtained employment with the Westinghouse Company, working eleven-hour shifts for $27 a week. The manager heard about the young Chinese who sang such haunting Chinese theodies as he worked and sent for him. When he heard what it was that had brought Sing to America, he offered him a difficult machine to operate at $1 on hour. Thus, together with a job as a janitor in a hotel for $27 a wrek in return for board and lodging, enabled him to earn about $600 during the summer—enough to keep him through his Freshman year.

All Sung's first four years in America were a struggle against poverty and ill-health. Dr. Rollin H. Walker, Professor of Bible at Wesleyan, became Sung's warm friend, and a great mutual affection and esteem existed between the two men. Sung looked upon Dr. Walker as his "American father" and loved him dearly. He profited greatly from his Bible teaching in class. Dr. Walker and his colleagues rook a great interest in Sung, and they were often concerned about this strongly independent young man who often dechned the assistance which was sometimes offered. They found it difficult to ensure that he was gesting proper food and lodging. He used to prepare his own food and it was of the timplest kind. Rather than be financially dependent on others, Sung would work at the most menial tasks—dish-washing, scrubbing floots, beaung carpets and cutting grass. When he was more fortunate, he obtained employment in iron foundries of factories. His faith in God and his dependence on prayer were often tested, but never disappointed.

As a student, Sung showed "milque and extraordinary scholarship" with a marked proficiency in chemistry. He originally curbarked on a pre-medical and a pre-theological curriculum, but, realizing this was attempting too much, he dropped the pre-theological course and dreided to specialize in mathematics and chemistry. It was his ambition to complete his degree course in three years instead of the normal four, but when he proposed this to his supervisor of studies the reply was that, in view of his poor English, it might be nearer five years! However, at the end of his Freshman year, Sung was top of his class with "A" grades and the goal did not seem so unattainable after all! Sung had become known for his "marvellous powers of concentration" and his brilliant mind. Teachers and students alike respected this young genius from China. What is more, "everybody liked him".

The year 1921 in America was one of financial crivis and widespread memployment. Sung found thard to find any remunerative work that summer, and the burden of his material needs weighted heavily upon him. To make matters worse, his older brother had now come to America to join him and work had to be found for them both. Just at this time of anxiety over their daily bread, Sung developed an abscess at the base of his spine, with an accontpanying fever. The doctor ordered an operation. Sung was almost desperare. How could be afford an operation, with weeks in hospital to follow? But his friends finally persuaded him that he must take medical advice. The kindness of a Christian nurse, visits from church friends and the success of the operation lightemed the weeks of convalescence and, to crown it all, two Christian friends paid all his hospital expenses! His feats were rebuked and his heart filled with gratitude to God.

But the demands of his class studies, the necessity to earn his own bread and butter and increasing physical weakness and ill-health led to periods of deep melancholy. Only his Christian activaties kept his head above water. He went to church regularly, Encouraged by a girl fellow-student, he did a lot of preaching on Sundays for which he was in great demand. He also organized evangelistic bands among the students and was their leaden on preaching exemptions to the country on occasions like Thanksgiving. Easter and Christmas, when the college had holidays.

This was work he enjoyed intensely and it was while engaged in it that he made many of his closest friends. He was deeply impressed with what he saw of Christian home life in some of the homes where he stayed and he longed to see such homes set up in China. Secretly, he promised hinself that one day it would be one of his tasks to promote Christian home life among the Christians of China.

It was in the home of a friend at Smithville, Ohio, that Sung had an experience on Thanksgiving Day, 1922, that made a deep and lasting impression on him. In a dram he saw Innself back Ilinghwa on the hill-top he laved so well. From the river which flowed into the sea not far away he suddenly heard a cry of distress. He tore down the hillside to rescue the drowning person, but found himself in danger of drowning until a cross was planted in the stream. Then, with his feet planted firmly on it, he engaged in the work of rescue; not just one person, but many—so many that they could not be counted. Finally, the scene changed and he found himself among a joyful throng in Heaven, all clasping his hand in gratitude and singing praises to God. To Sung this dream was an allegory of his own life and be frequently related it when giving his restimony of God's dealings with him.

The final teem before graduation was one of great pressure. Sung was under constant strain. His whole mind was on his coming examinations and he had to find extra time to give to study. So Bible study and prayer began to be neglected. And this soon began to tell in his personal life. He grew arrogant and impatient towards his brother. His behaviour was, he confesses, unbearable. He failed in other ways too. At the factory where he was working he made false returns of the hours he had worked so as to have more time for study. And, what caused him equal temore, he fell into the common practice among students of cheating in one of his examination papers. These lapses remained in Sung's memory like bloches marring his life record.

In the 1923 examinations for his bachelor's degree, Sung graduated with highest honours and was one of the four students at the head of a class of three hundred. He had a point average of 2-73 on a 3-00 basis, which was an outstanding achievement. He was awarded the gold medal and the cash prize for physics and chemistry and was elected to Phi Beta Kappa,* graduating on June 13, can laude.

As this was the first time that a Chinese student had achieved such distinction and, in spite of his handcaps, had graduated in a trifle over three years instead of the custotrary four. Sung's photo and accounts of his prowess appeared in United States papers all over the country and brought him overnight fame. Indeed, his fame spread to Europe, where most of the national newspapers carried the story of this brilliant young Chinese scientist.

The University of Minnesota at once offered Sing a post as demonstrator and assistant in chemistry with a comfortable salary. He was also offered $4,000 a year if he would study medicine at Harvard. Yet another offer was to study heology. He somehow firthe ought to have accepted this offer, but the fame which had come to him had blunted, for the time being, his desire for such things. He finally decided to accept a scholarship worth $300 a year to study for his M.Sc. degree at Ohio State University. This had been offered him on the recommendation of the assistant in the department of chemistry at Wesleyan who was brother-in-law to one of the Hinghwa missionaries.

who was brother-in-law to one of the Hinghwa missionaries. Sings's troubles should have been over and the future bright with hope. But deep in his heart there was no peace. Λ growing spiritual unrest showed itself in periods of deep depression,

Membership carries with it a gold key, the well-recognized badge of great distinction. CHAPTER FIVE

Inner Conflict 1923-1926

URING the summer vacation of 1923 there was to be an international student convention at Lake Geneva. Sung and one of his evangelistic band friends decided to attend.

Sing in particular was hoping to find the answer to his own problems there. Lake Geneva was several hundred miles away, so "Intefi-linking" was the only way two penaless students could hope to make the journey. As it happened, a young honeymoon couple who offered them a lift were both graduates of Wesleyan, and drey were delighted to find that one of their passengers was the Chinese student of whom they had read in the newspapers a few days previously. So the journey to Chicago was assured, and from there to the conference centre was no great distance.

Sung found the convention meetings little to his taste. They were not exclusively devotional and in some of the discussion groups there was much heated arguments scarcely calculated to quench the spiritual thirst of a needysoul. Sung sought out the keen Christians present and asked them to pray for him that the Lord would grant him the ease of heart and mind for which he longed. Finding nothing to help him in the meetings, he went out on to a billside overlooking the lake to pray in private and to read the Scriptures. Was it the scene which presented itself to his ages that reminded him of the Feeding of the Five Thousand in the Gospel scoty? At any rate, it was this story which was now made real and living to him as he read and to-read it with increasing joy. God showed him the needy multitudes of the world and the tragedy of helpless, empty-handed preachets having nothing with which to feed them. Then he saw what the Lord could do with the little which even a child might place in His hands. All the Lord needs is all that we have, and with this He who made the world out of multing can meet the need of a world. Rom. xii, came to Sung with tremendous force as be read the need to present his body in the need which Jesus had of the five loaves and two fishes. He could do nothing without them, but anything with them. Out bodies must be holiness into the Lord and sanctified for His scrvice alone. In a typically allegorieal interpretation, he took the five loaves to represent our "five senses, five internal organs, five fingers and five coes"! All must be for God. The two fishes were histories our "two cars, two eyes, two hands and two feet"! God will marvellously transform a body so presented them and cause multitudes to find satisfaction through us, and many hungry and thirsey after righteousness will be conforted and filled. This was enough for Sung. His heart was filled with joy as he saw the possibilities of a life wholly yielded to God. God had met him at Lake Geneva—not in the convention, but by the lake.

The Convention over, Sung returned to Delaware, planning to earn some money during the rest of the summer. But after a few days to a factory be began to feel unwell and to run a temperature, The doctor warred him that he was threatened with tuberculosis and must get work in the open air. A minister friend secured him work on a farm, but after three weeks for which he received no pay at all he found the work too hard and he had to give it up. Back he went to the city, sick at heart and sick in body. The twin spectres of poverty and disease were once again before hum. His next job was washing dishes in a lodging-house, but that did not last long, because his proud spirit of nationalism could not learte being treated like an illiterate coolie by the man under whom he worked. But mowing the grass verges on the highway was employment which kept him in the open air all day and brought him 45 ceuts an hour. This did him a world of good and all signs of his lung nouble seemed to disappear. Unable to afford "luxuries" like cod-liver oil or drugs, he was especially grateful to Cod for his restoration to health. With restoted health came restored spirits and he faced the autumn's studies in a new university with keen anticipation,

Ohio State University in Columbus, Ohio, was Sung's new alma mater. Here he found a cosmopolitan student body of over 10,000, representing thinteen different commites. He soon took a leading part in student activities and was insuramental in reviving the International Students' Association, of which he was soon elected President, He was also a member of the International League for Prace, In connection with the former, Sung or ganized concerts to raise funds and started a dimer club at which it was possible to sample the national dishes of any country represented in the Association. One of the objects of the Association was to campaign against the colom bar and racial discrimination in the universities. Banquets were given at which coloured and white students sat together at table.

But Sung was coming increasingly under the subtle influences of a liberal theology and of those who advocated a purely "social gospel". He thought of Jesus as a noble example, while the Blood of Christ as the sole ground of man's acceptance with God he began to trample under foot. He had no message for men and women caught in the tods of sin, though he devoted all his energies to the improvement of race relations and the ideal of social service.

The fame of the Association spread, and similar associations came into being in other universities. Sing's leadership in this movement gave him publicity of a new kind and he was described in the Press as "Obio's most famous student"!

In spite of the distractions of these activities, Sung completed the reading for his M.Sc. in nine months and took his degree in June, 1924. His name was again at the head of the list of streetsful candidates and he was awarded the Science Society's medal and gold key. As the smiling, dark-skinned Oriental with the typical lock of hair over his eyes walked out of the Assembly Hall after the conferring of degrees, a row of gold decorations on his coat, he attacted general attention.

Sing's interests were now increasingly centred in chemistry, and more especially in the chemistry of explosives. He felt that in this field he might perhaps serve his country. His aim was to obtain his Ph.D. degree and then return to China. Bin for this he needed to know both French and German. French he had already studied, but of German he knew nothing. That summer he temained in residence when the College was otherwise empty and concentrated on the new language. After two mouths he found that he could understand the general sense of a German chemistry book. In due course he applied to take the examination and was given a large volume on chemistry to translate into English. This he did so quickly and so well that the examiner thought he must have studied German for years!

A BIOGRAPHY OF JOHN SUNG

Sung was a popular personality and had a wide circle of friends. At pictures and parties he was always there, enjoying himself immensely. His fame brought him many invitations to address meetings of various kinds and he was lavishly fited and enter-rained.

The Chinese Government had by now taken notice of this brilliant student and was contributing to his support, so that, with the salary he was earning as an assistant lecture. Sing was no longer harassed by want.

By dint of rising constantly at dawn and sometimes working in the laboratory right through the night, Sung covered all the work for his doctorate within a year and nine months after receiving his M.Sc. His degree was conferred in March, 1926, before a large and distinguished assembly and he was showered with congratulations. Yet Sung tells us that in the midst of it all he felt a little conscience-stricken that, when he should have heen devoting his whole time to his studies, he had been spending so much time in a round of social and religious activities!

Dr. Sung was retained at the Ohio State University on the staff and he was also asked to assist the Professor of Chemistry in the preparation of an important new book. Laier the American Government invited him to make a study of chemical factory laws, His thirst for new knowledge was insatiable.

An attractive invitation now came from Germany, with the offer of a research fellowship and all expenses paid. Almost at the same time, Peking University, on the recommendation of Ohio State University, sent an urgent invitation to Dr. Sung to become Professor of Physiological Chemistry in the School of Medicine. Drawn as he naturally was to crurn to China and mader pressure from his father to help in the education of the other children, he nevertheless felt that he had still not acquired enough knowledge, and he declined the invitation from Peking. He had almost made up his mind to go to Germany.

One evening as he sat in the moonlight, thinking wistfully of his homeland and his home and deliberating what course he should take, he seemed to hear again the voice of God saying to him: "What shall it profit a man if he gain the whole world and lose his own soul?"

The very next morning after hearing this warning voice, the Rev. Wilbur Fowler, the Wesley Foundation representative at Ohio State University, called in to visit him and almost immediately made the remark:

"You know, you are not a bir like a scientist! You look far more like a preacher!"

During the conversation which followed, Sung disclosed his original purpose in coming to America and his experience of the night before. Mr. Fowler at once challenged Sung to go to New York to study religion at the Union Theological Sunnitary, and with but a moment's hesitation Sung gave hit assent. The thought of going to the great city of New York was frankly attractive. And was not the famous Columbia University there too? Surely in New York he would find something to satisfy him! He planned how he might combine theological studies at Union, where he was subsequently offered a scholarship, living-rooms and a generous living allowance, with further scientific studies at near-by Columbia.

It is doubtful whether D1. Sung even now had any heart for the thinistry. Was there, perhaps, some throught of satisfying his friends by taking a year's theology and then, on the peterst that he was not suited to such a calling, of returning to a scientific career? That may have been, but certain it is that he had no fixed purpose within his heart where there was little but turmoil and darkness. So far had he strayed from God and so full was his mitted of doubts and questions that Dr. Sung, in spite of all his earlier spiritual experiences, felt that he could no longer call linuself a child of God. Here was a true Prodigal who had wandered far from the Father's Home; still a son, but a wayward and back-sliding one!

CHAPTER SIX

The Blinding Revelation 1926-1927

THE autuum of 1926 found Dr. Siong-celt Sung, M.Sc., Ph.D., curolled at Union Theological Seminary amid the skystrapers of New York City. Dr. Henry Sloan Coffur had just been installed as the new President of the Seminary and Dr. Henry Pitney Van Dosen and Dr. Harry Emerson Fosdick were among the lecturers. On his way to New York Dr. Sung had stopped at Niagara to see the Falls. The sight of that great the belong the beautiful of the seminary and the belong the seminary and provide the seminary and the seminary a mass of water roaring over the high cliffs was awe-inspiring. And mass of wheel rosining over to limit in weat wearing in the standing there he prayed; "Lord, may the rivers of living waters so gash from my heart in an unending stream!"

Union Theological Seminary is well known for its liberal theology, but among the students there were a few who maintained conservative, evangelical convictions and some of these used to meet for prayer in the apartment occupied by Dr. and Mrs. C. S. Deming, missionaries on furlough from Seoul, Knrca. Dr. Deming had been Professor of Theology in the Union Methodist Theological Setninary there, and he and his wife went out of their way to befriend Dr. Sung, who became a frequent visitor in their home.

Dr. Sung plunged at once into his theological studies with all his powers of concentration and intellectual grasp. Instead of the usual three-years course, he started on a special one-year course which necessitated several hours more study a day than the other students. He soon found that the approach to the Bible and to the students. He soon formed that the approach to the bible and to the Christian faith, was largely philosophical. Every problem was discussed in the light of human reason. Anything in the Bible which could not be justified acientifically was rejected as being nonworthy of belief. Genesis was held to be unhistorical and belief in miracles unscientific. The historical Jenn was presented as an ideal to imitate, while the substitutionary value of His death and His physical Resurrection were denied. Prayer was regarded as largely subjective in value. To dissent from such views and opinions was to become an object of pity or derision. The other students were surprised that a doctor in science should want to come and study theology, but Dr. Sung explained that, having acquired much of the world's wisdom, he now wanted to learn more of the wisdom which comes from God. At the end of the first term Dr. Sung's record was:

For his practical work Dr. Sung had been assigned to take a class in a Sunday School at the Universal Church attended by Chinese children. He delighted to play games and sing with them and be culturalled them with his stronger.

and he enthralled them with his stories.

But all the time Sung was rapidly losing his faith and had reached the point where he had nothing but scorn for the evangelical pastors of New York churches who sometimes visited the Seminary. His habit of daily prayer was still maintained, but it had degenerated to a formality. It was no longer a power in his life. As his confidence in Christianity had been shaken to its foundations through the traching he was receiving. Sung turned again to the ancient religious of the East. In the Seminary library he found many volumes on Briddhism and Taoism. He translated into English the famous Taoist classic (Tao Teh Ching) and wondered if the "way of chastity and quieness" advocated by Lao-tze might not bring him the peace he sought. He read a paper to his class on this philosopher. Mysticism attracted him and he even resorted to chancing the Buddhist Scriptrues in the secret of his own 100m, hoping that through self-denial he might obtain the salvation of which Buddha spoke. He completed the manuscription of several books on religion. But his own heart remained in inten darkness. Looking back tover several years of intensive scientific study, followed by these months of religious search, be concluded that neither science nor religion could bring him any rounfort or juy. In his search for light he made the round of the many cults and theosophic societies in which New York abounds, bur in vain. The world seemed altogether vanity and life only notible and misery. "My soul", he wrote, "wandered in a wilderness. I could neither sleep not car. My faith was like a leaking, sonm-driven ship without captain or compass. My heart was filled with the deepest unbappiness."

In this state of mind he sought consolation in the friendship of a Chinese classmate and the friendship deepened into love. But the fact that he had been betrothed in China to a girl of his parents' choice prevented the contemplation of any serious romance. The emotional strain of this friendship, added to the other burdens of his mind, made life intolerable.

But the darkest hour precedes the dawn. And dawn was at band. Shortly before Christmas, Dr. Sung had accompatited some fellow students to a special evangelistic campaign at Calvacy Baptist Church of which Dr. Haldeman was pastor. He expected to hear an eloquent and learned preacher, but instead the speaker was a fifteen-year-old girl! As she came on to the platform, read the Seriptures and led in prayer, Sung became aware of something in the atmosphere that was different; the presence of God could be felt. The Gospel was presented clearly and powerfully and the Cross was uplifted. "Even L a prond man, was moved by her", said Sung, "and my soul's thirst was somewhat slaked." After the sermon, many from all walks of life went to the front to seek salvation and with tears of repentance. Dr. Simg's companions scoffed, but he himself was so impressed that he went back for four more consecutive evenings, and rach time the tremendous power in the young evangelist's preaching gripped him. He would have given anything to possess such power in prayer and in preaching. He determined at all costs to discover for himself the secret of that power.

During the winter vacation Dr. Sung turned to Christian biography to investigate the secret of the success of great Christians of the past. He determined to share their secrets and began to give himself increasingly to prayer in his search for God, On New Yeat's Eve the words "I will destroy the wisdom of the wise and the discernment of the discerning will I bring to nought" suddenly fashed into his mind with great conviction; as he applied the words to himself he trembled with feat. That night he could not sleep as he contemplated the emptiness of worldly wisdom and human ability. All his distinctions had not brought him a step nearer God, the fountain of all true wisdom.

During this Christmas vacation a convention of seminary students was held in the Middle West. The English clergyman and funcus chaplain of World Wat One, "Woodbine Willy", or the Rev. Studdert Kennedy, was one of the speakers. The student delegates who had attended the convention and who returned to make rheir reports were divided in their opinions about him, some being deeply impressed and others very antagonistic. One of those who had been unfavourably impressed was a professor from Teachers' College and a follower of the behaviouristic inechanism school of psychologists. In his report he described Studdert Kennedy's references to the Cross as pure sentimentality. There was evident antagorusm to the Cross and its message in his eye and in his voice. As the speaker finished there was a moment's silence. Then Dt. Sung stood to his feet and with deepest emotion gave witness before the assembled professors and students of what the Cross of Christ meant to him. There were others present who had felt promptings to make the protest, but fear had held them back and it was left to a Chinese Christian to take this hold and magnificent stand. It was Sung's opportunity to make his protest at the attacks on his faith which were causing him such anguish of soul.

In spite of his intellectual convictions, however, Dr. Sung's heart had still not found peace. The strain brought on by the bitter spiritual struggle following the years of intense and concentrated study and the recent acute emotional experience over his friendship were undoubtedly disturbing the balance of his mind. Sung was both a genins and a man of great emotional intensity. That type of mind is always on the borderland of a travrosis. In My Testinony be wrote: "The heavy burden of my soul became heavier day by day until on February 10th I got to the point when I no longer had any desire to live." He wrote several letters to his old tracher at Ohio Wesleyan University. Dr. Rollin Walker, the one friend in wbom he felt he could confide something of the fierce spiritual conflict through which he was passing. Of one of these letters Dr. Walker wrote: "At Union he studied with feverish intensity, trying to do three near's work at the same time. In the course of the year he sent me a letter which struck me as incoherent and as the product of an overtrained brain. I enclosed it to Dr. Coffin, suggesting that he needed medical attention," Dr. Coffin took no immediate action, but kept Sing under close observation.

Meanwhile, Sung had determined to give up everything clsc in order to seek the fullness and power of the Holy Spirit so that he could go our and witness for the Lord. He absented himself from lectures and spent the time in prayer. Day after day went by in this way. Then on the evening of February 10th light broke on his darkened soul. He saw all the sins of his life spread out before him. Ar first it seemed that there was no way to get tid of them and that he must go to Hell. He tried to forget them, but he could not. They pierced his very heart. He searched in his trunk for his neglected New Testament and began to read it again for the first time for months. He turned to the story of the Cross in Luke xxiii, and as he read the story came alive. So vivid was the sight of the Saviour dying for his sms that he seemed to be there at the foot of the Cross and pleading to be wasted from all his sins in the Precious Blood, It was to him a vision as clear as the one the Apostle Paul saw on the Damascus road. He continued weeping and praying until midnight. Then he heard a voice saying, "Son, thy sins are forgiven," and ell his load of sin sectned to fall at once from his shoulders. A feeling of intense relief came over him and he leapt to his feet with a shour of "Hallehigh!" Forgetting that it was midnight and that others were sleeping, he tasked out into the halls of the dormitory, shouting and praising God for deliverance! He was conscious that into the cleansed room of his heart, the Heavenly Guest, the Holy Spicit, had entered in His fallness. From now on his name was to be John, after John the Baptist, the Forerunner. John Song now understood that he was called to be a hemid of the Coming King, to prepare His way before Him.

The morose, brooding Chinese student with whom his class-mates had become familiar appeared the next morning as a changed man, Joy was written all over his face and he boldly testified to his teachers and fellow students alike of what God Irad done for him. At the first possible opportunity he asked permission to give a five-minute restimony of what Christ lad come to mean to him at a meeting of the international club of which he was a member. His sole desire now was no preach Christ to everyone. He began to go out daily to witness to everyone he met, urging them with tears to come to Christ and confess their sins if they would enjoy eternal life. He systematically visited all the ministers he knew and urged them too to confess their nufaithfulness and sloth in preaching the Gospel. He invited them to pray with him and to seek the Lord's forgiveness and the cleansing of the Precious Blood. Though he was well received by only a few, he was encouraged to go on with what he believed to be his God-appointed duty.

Not many days after this tremendom crisis, John had a strange dream. Looking into an open coffin, he saw that the corpse was himself, dressed in academic cap and gown and holding a diploma! He heard a voice say, "John Sung is dead—dead to the world!" Then the corpse began to stir and awaken and angels above began to weep, totil he called out, "Don't weep, angels! I will remain dead to the world and to self!" All the remaining years of his life show how sincerely he carried this

Another striking thing happened to him within a week of his midnight experience. A complete stranger one day presented him with a globe of the world, which he took 10 mean that the Lord had called him to carry the Gospel to the whole earth. He continued to pray the more earnestly that God world enable him to fulfil His will for his hife.

Songs of joy filled his mouth and praises overflowed from his lips. He tossed aside all his theological books and gave himself solely to the reading of his neglected Bible. He would walk up and down the corridors repeating Scripture passages to himself, in his 100th he would pace the floor and pray aloud, often far into the night. He was a transformed personality, so filled with the Spirit that life seemed to him to have begun anew. It was like a second conversion!

CHAPTER SEVEN

Into Arabia 1927

ATIENT NO. X is missing from homicidal ward. Must be traced and brought back immediately. Urgent!" This message was flashed to the police from the mental hospital at White Plains, N.Y. Searchers were immediately sent out with police dogs, and No. X, a Chinese, was soon discovered hiding in a wheatfield a few miles from the asylum.

So it was that John Snng found himself back again in the dreadful atmosphere of a ward of dangerous, fighting, swearing maniaes. It was because he had not been able to endure a moment longer the mental anguish of living in such a company that John had planned an escape. The failure of his attempt to get away east him into a dejection so intense that dark thoughts of ending his own life suggested themselves to him. Even as he harboured such thoughts, God's voice was heard in 1 chuke. How could be contemplate so grievous a sin?
"But, Lord," he replied, "I wanted to serve Thee and to repay my debt of gratitude. Instead of that, here I am shut up in a place where there is never a moment's quiet! What use is there in going on living?"

"All things work together for good to them that love God," came back the answer. If you can enduse this trial patiently for 193 days you will have learned how to bear the Cross and to walk the Calvary road of unswerving obedience!"

John saw his ordeal in a new light, and now the glory of the Lord seemed to shine around him, transforming his prison house into a training ground for future service.

Following the supreme spiritual crisis of his life on February t2th the depression and gloom of the past months had suddenly given place to an unrestrained and light-hearted exuberance which confirmed the suspicions of the Union Theological Seminary authorities that the years of intensive study and the recent emotional strain had upset the balance of Sung's mind, Dr. Coffin therefore followed the suggestion made by Dr. Walker, John Sung's old friend, and arranged for an examination by a psychiatrist. The outcome was that Sung was persuaded to go sanatorium" for a time of test, John consented, but only under

There is nothing wrong with my head! The trouble has been in my heart, but that is all right now!

Dr. Sing was at first placed in the psychopathic ward of Bloomingdale Hospital, where he enjoyed good food and complete leisure to read his Bible. He was also given to understand that he would be there for about six weeks only. He was undoubtedly tired and was only too glad of this enforced rest. But he found the repeated examinations by the doctors, being treated as a mental case, and the close investigation of all his correspondence intensely annoying. However, he put up with this and gave himself to the reading of his Bible and getting to know some of the other patients. After all, his six weeks would soon he up!

When the six weeks expited, John asked for his discharge, But, to his dismay, the request was refused. Feeling that he had been deceived, he argued angeily with the doctor. His old fiery temper flared up. And the doctor was confirmed in his opinion that this patient was indeed mentally unbalanced. He ordered him to be transferred to the ward for violent patients?

A week after his attempted escape, Sung was able to have a reasonable talk with the doctor in which he satisfied him about his fit of anger and subsequent reasons for trying to escape. He was then returned to his original ward, where there was peace and quiet again. Through the spring months and the hot, stearny days of summer, while news of flood disasters and soaring prices filled the newspapers, God kept John free from all attricty about his daily bread and freed his mind to concentrate on his Bible. He devoted almost all his waking hours to reading it through from beginning to end-which he did forty times! Each time he used a different scheme of study. And the more he read it the more enjoyment he derived from it. He seemed to be shown a key to the understanding of every one of the 1,189 chapters of the Bible. He made comprehensive word studies of a great variety of topics and recorded all his findings in numerous notebooks. When he found that hospital orderlies were prying into his English notes, he changed over to the Chinese language, and thereafter all his Bible study notes were written in Chinese character. The Holy Spirit taught him much both through the Word of God and also in dreams and visions, material which he stored up at his united and in his journals for funne use.

The mental hospital thus became John Sung's real theological college! It was there that he began to appreciate the deep truths of God's Word and it was there that he was taught the difficult lesson of quiet submission to the will of God.

"He disciplined me to become His submissive servant. He took away my very obstinate and bad temper."

Sung was permitted after a while to write to his friends, Dr. Rollin Walker among them. Dr. Walker described these letters as "beautiful, humble. Christlike letters . . . absolutely free from any morbidity".

There seems every reason to suppose that the resort to the advice of a psychiatrist on Dr. Sung's behalf was excusable on the ground of his intense morbidity, whatever its cause may have been. It is equally clear that it was a spiritual release which effected his core, and for this be owed nothing to the treatment received in the mental hospital. When sin had been confessed and put away and when the Holy Spirit had taken full possession of Dr. Sung's heart and mind, there was no longer any need for the services of a mental specialist!

However, God allowed Sung to spend over six mouths in retirement in order to teach bin teaths which he could never have learned at Union Theological Seminary. He used to refer to August 30th, 1927, the day of his discharge from the mental hospital, as the day when he received his highest degree! This was exactly 193 days after his entry into the hospital and 200 days after his spiritual crists in February.

The release was brought about largely through the intervention of the Chinese Cousul and of Dr. Walker, who negotiated with the hospital Superimendent and with the State of New York Health Anthority. Dr. Walker hunself became Dr. Sung's guarantot, and the latter was discharged on condition that he should leave the United States and Jeturn to China,

As far as Union Seminary was concerned, John had virtually severed his own connections with the place when he burned his theological hooks as "books of demons" and ceased to attend lectures. The Seminary had long since officially removed his name from the roll of students. It has never been proud of its connection, with the "Wesley of China". Said one of the professors: "Union Seminary has nothing to do with John Sung!"

After his discharge, John went with Dr. Walker to Delaware, where he was Dt. Walker's house guest for a month. During this time the Commencement exercises of his old college, Ohio Wesleyan University, took place. But John's thoughts were now back it China. He was daily in prayer about the unknown inture and seeking the revelation of God's will for his

On October 4th John sailed from Seattle for Shanghai, after saying "Goodbye" to his good friend, Dr. Rollin Walker. He had been seven and a half years in the United States. He was now a man of outstanding scholastic attainments, and doubtless any of the national universities of China would have welcomed his services in the sphere in which he had specialized-namely, chemistry. But through deep travail of soul Julia Sung had come to a knowledge of God which he knew he must share with his own countrymen. God had so deah with him that he had uot a shadow of doubt that he had been called to the task of preaching the gospri in China, and perhaps to other lands also.

As he thought back over his experiences, he remembered the vision of the drowning men and the miracle of the Feeding of the Five Thousand. He recollected the dream of himself lying in a coffin in cap and gown affirming, "I will remain dead to the world and to self!" And with the memory came the thought of the diplomas, the gold medals and the keys of honour stored in his baggage. Every Chinese sets great stone by such evidence of finished scholarship, and John was no exception. They would, he knew, be an open seasme into a career which might be as brilliant as it would be remainerative. He was moved, too, by the knowledge of the debt he owed to his parents and to his family. Might he not serve God in the sphere for which his education had fitted him? Might not the chair of chemistry in some great university be a more effective and influential pulpit than any from which his father had preached?

As the ship sailed steadily eastward, the conflict continued to rage in his breast. He had already yielded his all to God. Was not that enough? Surely God would be able to make use of his contract calents and degrees without making further demands upon him! Yet John, with the clarity of insight which constant payer gives, saw the dangers of his position. He anticipated the subtle temptations which awaited him: the inastent urge of his family and the flattery of friends. And he thought of the words of the Apostle Paul: "What things were gain to me, those I counted loss for Christ." Like Paul, he would renorme the world and its fame once for all: he would burn his bridges behind him.

One day, as the vessel neared the end of its voyage, John Sung went down to his cabin, took out of his cabin trunk his diplomas, his includes and his fraternity keys and threw them overboard. All except his doctor's diploma, which he retained to satisfy his father. This was later framed and hung in his old home. The Rev. W. B. Cole saw it there about 1938. Dt. Sing noticed Mr. Cole looking at it one day and said: "Things like that are useless. They mean nothing to me!"

"There must be great renunciations . . . if there are to be great Christian careets." Dr. Denny's words might have been written with Dr. John Sung in mind, It is probably the chief secret of John Sung's career that there came a day when he made just such a renunciation of all that this world holds dear.

Forbid it, Lord, that I should beast
Save in the Cross of Christ my Lord:
All the vain things that thann me most
I sacrifice them to His Blood.

CHAPTER ÉIGHT

Beginning at Jerusalem 1927-1930

JOHN SUNG disembasked at Shanghai, where he at once discarded his Emopean dress. When he went on board the little coasting steamer hound for Hinghwa he was indistinguishable, in his simple cotton gown, from the other travellers. Old Pastor Sing, accompanied by his four youngest sons, met John at the wharf. Did the father look for his son as a scholarly standard with a branch was in a house white at the look for his son as a scholarly gentlemen in a lounge suit and tie? If so, he was disappointed. Bur greater disappointment awarted him.

At home, Mis. Sung prepared a feast of welcome at which all the family gathered. It was nearly over seven years since they had parted. The table was heaped with such delicacies as the home could affend. The conversation turned on the mount hims. could afford. The conversation turned on the many things seen could afford. The conversation turned on the many things seen in America and the recent voyage. But before the evening ended Pastor Sing spoke what was on his mind:

"Ju-un, now that you have your diploma, I hope you will accept a position in a Covernment university. I have been abible teacher all my life. I have received only $50 a month as salary. Unless your mother had provided the rice, we could never lawe fed our ten children. Now I hope you will help to educate your younger brothers!"

Things were just as John had feared. But his decision had been

Things were just as John had feared. But his decision had been made, and he teplied respectfully:

"Father, I cannot do this, for I have dedicated my life to the preaching of the gospel?"

The whole family wept their disappointment. Pastot Sing had here informed by the Union Theological Seminary of his son's detention in a mental hospital, and this news suggested that there might be some truth in the report of his mental decaugement.

After spending seven years acquiring degrees and fame, was it possible that he was to turn his back on a career of such promise?

For a week the parents observed their son's behaviour closely. He gave most of his time to prayer and to the study of his Bable, daily adding to the notes of his discoveries in his notehooks. Finally, from what they saw, they were convinced that he was both sound in mind and had had a deep experience of the work of God in his heart. Half relutantly, they accepted his momentous decision and gave him their blessing and encouragement as he faced his hfre-work.

At the first opportunity, John visited his old school and was invited to address the boys at a special assembly. The school was naturally proud of its distinguished son, but everyone was not a little surprised to hear an address, not on America or science or patriotism, but on the Feeding of the Five Thousand!

Soon after, John accepted a part-time appointment on the staff of this school—the Methodist Christian High School—to reach chemistry and Bible for three days a week. He did this in order to assist his younger brother through college. The remaining four days a week he planned to devote ro evangelistic work in the district.

It seems to have been about this time that General Chang Tso-lin, the warlord of Manchuria, bearing that Dr. Sung had returned to China, offered but a lucrature post in his arrenal at Mukden in connection with the manufacture of explosives. But now nothing could distract him from his sole ambition to preach Christ.

A sore trial now awaited John—his wedding! From a Chinese point of view, the martiage which had been arrenged for him in his infancy could not be delayed any longer. The parents of the bride-to-be had waited long enough, and it was high time the girl was manied and transferred to her husband's home! John accepted the inevitable, but with no joyful arricipation. He did not know the girl, and did not even know whether or not she was a true Christian. But the day arrived. The enementy was performed. The numerons friends and relatives gathered to shate in the festivines and to offer their congratulations. And, very reluctantly, John entered upon the responsibilities of a matried man.

Three days later he was in the home of the Rev. and Mrs. Frances P. Jones, Methodast missionaries in Hingline and John's former high school teachers. Mrs. Jones asked another young man present if he were married too. When the reply was "No!" John was heard almost to groun, "I wish I were not!"

This was not a propitions beginning to married life, and in fact John never became a family man. Through all his eighteen years of marriage he enjoyed little or no real home life. In those early days his wife was not a particularly earnest Christian; and, as she had a quick temper, quarrels were frequent. Few would find John's temperament one with which it was easy to be compatible. There were three daughters and two sons born to them, but John never succeeded in being a good father. He never seemed to have time for his children and failed to establish strong bonds of love and understanding with them.

During the extensive travels of Dr. Sung's later career, the family home was in Shanghai. There the children naturally learned the local dialect, but they were never allowed to forget their native Hinghwa tongue.

Home life, in the intervals between his journeys, seemed to bring our the latent impatience in Sung's temperament as nothing else did. One day in 1938, a visitor to the boine heard Mis, Sung say to him:

say to him:

"You lose your temper at home: it's best for you to be away!"

The children were all given ordinary Chinese names, but the fither insitted on their having Scriptural names too. The first four were therefore called Genesis, Exodus (a boy), Levticus and Numbers. But when it came to the fifth, another boy, he skipped Deuteronomy because of the implication in the name that there rnight be a "repetition" of the early death of the first boy and called him Joshua. John once told a friend that his favourite child was Leviticus, because Levi was wholly given up to the service of God! He was least fond of Numbers, he said, because Numbers was full of spiritual declension!

Throughout that winter and spring of 1928, John Sung devoted all his spare time to open-air preaching and Bible teaching in Hinghwa and the surrounding district. The boy preaches who had been so well known when in high school was everywhere given a warm welcome. But nationalistic and anti-Christian agitation ran high in those days and when Sung began to denomice as idolatry the weekly ceremony of bowing to the portrait of Dr. Sun Yar-sen, the father of the Chinese Revolution, he ran into a political aroum. The Nationalist Party, the Knominteng, had local offices everywhere, and when in one city the acalous local officials got wind of Sung's demunciations, police were ordered to arrest him as a counter-revolutionary! But Sung escaped arrest because be had already bren guided to take his departure hefore the police arrived! The next step taken by the Party, therefore, was to stir up the staff and boys in his school against the new teacher so as to have him dismissed. By false toport and bribety, the boys were persuaded to go to the teacher's room to make rrouble. Bur just as they were on the point of bearing him up, a sudden thunderstorm broke and the mob scattered. Sung, however, decided to resign from his position on the staff rather than cause continued unpleasantness.

As a marked man in the eyes of the Party Bureau, John was now compelled to avoid the larget cities and to give his time to the smaller towns and villages. He was Joined by other young men and women who liad been brought to Christ through the first visit to Fukien in May, 1928, of one of the Bethel Bands from Shanghai, under the leadership of the Rev. Andrew Gih. John liad been delighted to meet the Bethel Band and also Dr. Joseph Flacks, a convected Jew, who happened to be visiting Sienyr at the same rime. These men, on fire to preach Christ, had warmed John's beart, and he bad rejoiced in the revival blessing which had accompanied their ministry. And now the little evangelistic band, under Sing's leadership, began to see for themselves all the signs of a true work of the Holy Spirit.

Sung had closely observed both the preaching of Dr. Flacks and the methods of the Bethel Band. But, though influenced by what he saw, Sung was no mere imitator. He took over methods, adapted them and made them his own. In the village missions Sung used to preach and the others used to testify of the grare of God in their lives. Conviction and confession of sin resulted and clear evidences of the new birth were soon seen in many lives. His voice reduced to a hourse whisper, John returned to Hinghwa to report with overflowing joy what they had witnessed. That this was a work of God was evident, for, humanly speaking, the times were most unfavourable. All over China, including Fukien, the anti-Christian movement was so strong that in some places chapels were being form down and Christians were everywhere under strack.

Reports of John Sung's ministry and the blesving which was attending it reached the headquarters of the Methodist Mission in Boochow. The Rev. Frank T. Cartwright, Director of Evangelism, made a special two-day journey by boat and on foot to watch John in action. Mt. Cartwright found the team in a large marker town living on the coarsest of food. Sung's extraordinary leadership of the group of young high school boys at once impressed the visitor—even more than his preaching. The young people looked to him as Timoothy and Silas might have looked to the Apostle Paul. Mr. Cartwright recalls his impressions thus.

"The meetings themselves were noisy and characterized by the singing of simple songs specially composed to emphasize the theme for each meeting; the existence of God, the love of God, Christ the Saviour, sits repentance, faith and the Christian life. John's preaching was impassioned and strangely patterned on the preaching and pulpit mannerisms of Billy Sunday (whom John may have heard preach in America). He would tace back and forth on the platform or leap over the Communion iall and stand in the aisles. Of the would walk down the aisles and point his finger in the face of someone in the audience, then rush back to the front of the church and perhaps stand on the Communion rail to finish his sermon! People in considerable numbers came forward after every meeting to pray and to accept Christ."

The secret of the success of the young coangelist was twofold:

his devotion to prayer and his intense earnestness. The ream spent much time together between the meetings in earnest pleading with God on behalf of cold churches and nominal Christians, And they saw such churches and Christians revived, Many who had hitherto been merely formal church members were born again and became living wineses for Christ.

John Sung was deeply concerned too that the young converts should be well established in the Word of God. To this end he enlated his missionary friends to help him with some special Bible study classes to follow up the revival meetings. These were held in 1928 in the "Howenly Horse Mountains" near Hinghwa and the fifty young people present profited greatly from the eight days of solid Bible teaching. They afterwards scattered with a plan to visit each of the 100 little country chirches in the district and to share with them the truths they had been learning themselves.

The same sammer, Dr. Sung, feeling his need of spiritual refreshment for himself, made the journey to a lovely mountain tesort overlooking the River Yangtre to attend the annual summer convention there. Kuling is beautifully situated and is a place of hallowed memories for many of the leaders of the Chinese Chutch. While he was there, John was invited to give his testimony. This was his only public appearance but it was also his first introduction to a wider Christian public.

Back in Fukien again, John was joined by a missionary and a Chinese friend and together they went round the churches leading meetings and investigating the general conditions of the church life. John was saddened by seeing so many theological college graduates who were failing to exercise an effective ministry in the churches for which they had a spiritual responsibility. He saw only too clearly that a mere intellectual training without the Spirit's grace and power produced only unspiritual frielings who were unable to conserve the firms of revival, to build up Christians on the Word of God or to establish a strong church life.

hi order to meet this need in a small way, Sung started an "innerant theological college", Starting with five students, he divided the time between Bible study and evangelism. Their first field of operations was an island off the coast on which were many villages. There, idols were destroyed, many helieved on the Lovd and much valuable experience was gained by the students. Returning to Sung's native village and birthplice, the "college" took a hand in the farm life. It was harvest-time and the teacher and the students alike worked all day it; the field helping the farmers, then in the evenings preached to a full chapel with great effect. Thus, from place to place the "theological college" moved, meeting with a varying response but always seeing some true conversions. There were churches, however, which were obviously more interested in the literacy movement than in spiritual renewal, and Sung was saddened by the cold reception they received.

John Snng's fame had already reached distant parts of his own province. Early in 1929 he had responded to an invitation to visit Amoy, Chuanchuw and Changehow in the south. The seal of God was manifestly on His servant's munistry there and the vision grew clearer in his own mind of a wider ministry in other provinces of China and perhaps, eventually, outside China. But the time was not yet ripe. Again, in the spring of 1930 he paid a visit to the north of the province, where at Shanchang, Yenping and Vangkon he was greatly used to bring comfort to many churches exposed to the danger of anti-Christian haired and general lawlessness. At Yenping, there was a warm response from many of the students, but there was again strong opposition to the message from the local Party Burcatt, who determined to arrest Sung. The evening before action was to be taken, John was taken ill and the doctor ordered him to stop work immediately and to go home to rest. He therefore took ship early the next morning and was not to be found wheat the police attived an hour or two later to take him!

Still deeply concerned about the oversight of the thurches in his own neighbomhood, Sung worked out a plan for the systematic training of local preachets. He was auxious that they should themselves be better taught in the basic truths of the Bible. So he divided the 100 or so village churches into groups of ten and then devoted a whole year to visiting each group in turn. At every centre, forty to fifty representatives were summoned to attend a training class ar which Sung gave instruction on family worship and raught them how to use new methods and materials. There were also special classes for young people to instruer them in ways in which they could assist their leaders and pastors.

In one centre, Dr. Sung was going through John's Gospel with a class of young people, and he asked them to bring in some little object, like a flower, a plant or just anything from outside. When the class began, he noticed that the number of the objects brought was exactly the number of the verses in the chapter for study that day! So he contrived to make every object an illustration for each verse in the chapter! As he spoke he suggested to the students and to a missionary friend afterwards that there was something wonderful, even supernatural, in this coincidence! The missionary quicily replied that, far more wonderful than Dr. Sing's ingenuity was the power of the gospel he preached to transform a soul. There was always a tendency to make the Bible fit into D1. Sung's system, and he was never a theologian! He was always at his best when expounding the Scriptures verse by verse, He once held a class of high school students spellbound for an hour and a half on the story of Naaman,

One result of the training classes for local preachers was that family worship was started in over 1,000 hours. Sting was greatly encouraged by the response he mer with among the rank and fide of the churches, but he found the paid pastors a nuch more difficult and unresponsive field. He felt much sympathy with them in their difficulties. They were usually nuderpaid and consequently tempted to augment their salaries in secular employment. The pastors seemed to have neither the time nor the qualifications to foster true spirituality and to carry our faithfully their pastoral duties. On the contrary, a hired ministry of this type was all too often a sumbling-block to Christians and to those outside the

for two and a half years. All this time he had been engaged in constant travel and had worked very hard indeed. He now had two children, a girl and a baby boy. As a voluntary worker, he had been receiving no regular salary, and it had been difficult to make ends meet. He and Mrs. Sung had to think twice before making the smallest expenditure of money. It is little wonder that sometimes the Tempter suggested to John's mind the thought that all this time he could have been earning a handsome salary from the Government. Why, then, in serving the Lord, was his reword so meagre? This temptation assailed him aftesh one day in Passion Weck. But as he thought of His Lord going all the way to the Cross, he seemed to hear Him say, "Cannot you obey Me to the full? Cannot you surrender your all to Me? I know all about your cares. Remember that after the shame and pain of the Cross there comes the glory of Resurrection! Be patient a while longer and all will be well!"

But parience was not easy for John Sung to learn. When, soon after this, invitations began to come to him from Nanchang, the Kiangsi provincial capital, and from Nanking, the national capital, he was eager to be away. God's word, bowever, was: "My child, wait a little longer. My time has not yet come!" An outbreak of painful boils served to curh his impatience. He had been all packed up and ready to start, but the Lord had to hold him in with bit and bridle. A cholera epidemic struck Hinghwa and John was one of the victims. In his distress, he confessed his impatience and his sin in desiring to run ahead of God's guidance, He told God he would gladly spend the rest of his life as an unknown commy preacher if such should be His will. After his recovery, John again accepted an invitation to conduct a mission this time a children's mission in Haitan, at which many found Christ as Saviour. Then he was asked to lead a retreat for church leaders on one of the coastal islands, where many were stirred up to serve God in a new way. The whole island felt the impact of the new evangelistic impetus which resulted.

God had accepted John Sung's unconditional surrendet. And He was now about to open the doors into wider fields of service,

Prior to Sung's return home, life in the country around Hinghwa had been rendered perilous in the extreme by bandstry. Murder and pillage were the order of the day. But for the past three years the young scholar-preacher had been able to carry on his work freely. Peace and security had reigned. Now, however, the province was again thrown into punic by an invading army of rebel-soldiers. The Methodist missionaries had to move to the larger centres. The little band of fellow workers who had laboured in such close fellowship with Sung scattered to their homes. The door for country evangelism was again closed. Sung's bridges bad been cut behind him and there was nothing to do but press on to new battle-grounds.

But his testing time was not yet over. Very soon after Sung's own recovery, Mrs. Sung and the baby of only three months. Exodus, both became very ill. The baby died after a short illness and the sorrowing parents sought comfort in the story of Moses, who was cast adrift on the water three months after birth and the assurance that their little son Exodus had "gone out" of the world to be with Christ.

Three days after the funeral, John Sung left home. God had at last given the word: "Arise, my son! The time has come! Leave your country and go to the place whither I will lead you!"
"Without further delay", John writes, "I said farewell to my wife who was still on a bed of sickness and to my family and took action to Shareshail Advantage has held and the still to Shareshail Advantage has been sone as the still to Shareshail Advantage has been sone as the still to Shareshail Advantage has been sone as the still to Shareshail Advantage has been sone as the still to Shareshail Advantage has been sone as the still to Shareshail Advantage has been sone as the still to Shareshail Advantage has been sone as the still sone as the

And in Samaria 1930-1931

R. SUNG had in 1930 joined the Hinghwa Conference of the Methodist Church. At the first conference after his return from America he had already been invited to preach the conference sermon. Auti-Christian agitation was then at its most violent phase, and in choosing the story of Jonah for his subject, Dr. Sung had compared Jonah's ship to the Church in the midst of the storm and, of course, the sleeping prophet, oblivious of the dangers, was representative of the preachers! Such an ourspoken serinou was unpalarable to some, hut John Sung was never one to seek popularity, and he soon earned for himself notoriety for his slashing attacks on preachers who were not faithful to their responsibility to preach the Gospel and to win men and women to Christ.

He saw the situation in China only too clearly. The weakness of the system by which foreign missionaries educated, trained and appointed men as camployees of missionary societies was everywhere apparent. To men without a clear call of God to the ministry and even without a personal and saving experience of Christ, the Christian ministry was merely a profession, a means of employment. The effect on the Chinese Church as a whole of having leaders of this type was disastrous. And John Sing realized how little could be done so long as unconverted or unspiritual men were in control. Revival among the rank and file might be nullified by pastors and preachers opposed to revival. Hence his devastating attacks on church officials and mission schoolteachers wherever he went. These attacks were often unwarranted and tended to alienate some who would have been his best friends. But only too often they were justified and accused the very natural antagonism of those who were unwilling to accept his strictures.

As John Sung entered a wider sphere of ministry as Evangelistat-large of the Hinghwa Conference, he was fully awate of his call to be a John the Baptist and to denounce sin wherever it might be found; nor did he shrink from his difficult task. He believed that God had given him just fifteen years in which to fulfil his ministry, and never once in those fifteen years did he space httoself or turn aside from his commission.

The journey which took Dr. Sung far from home for the first time on Christian service was occasioned by a special mission to Paking. The Methodist Bishop of Foothow appointed him to study theological education and the mass education experiment initiated by Dr. James Yeu at Tingbien, near Peking. The intention was that he should return to direct the Mission literacy project throughout the Methodist field.

On reaching Shanghai, he heard of an East China conference of the "Christianize the Home" movement to be held at Huchow in Kiangsu Province, organized by the leaders of the National Christian Council of China, There were over 100 provincial delegaces attending. Dr. Sung went there unaunounced to see what he could learn. Wearing his coarse, homespun cloth gown or an old suit of foreign clothes and with his swarthy complexion, he looked most unlike an official delegate. For a day or two, not knowing the local dialect, he hardly spoke to anyone and took no part in the discussions. But then, one day in a prayer meeting, the urge to lead in prayer came upon him, and that prayer was so full of power that Mrs. Frank R. Millican of the American Presbyterian Mission and the Christian Literature Society sought John out and was surprised to find a man who could speak fluence English! An opportunity was at once given to this distinguished guest who had been living among them incognito to speak at one of the discussion groups about his past three years' work to Fukica, especially the extraordinary growth of the practice of family worship. Invitations followed to give his testimony to the delegates and to speak in local churches, schools and hospitals. Huchow thus became the first place outside his native province where the doors for testimony were opened to him.

The renference over, Dr. Sung went first to Hangchow and from there back to Shanghai to stay with the Rev. and Mrs. Frank Millican, who arranged for him to address the Christian Literature Society on village evangelism, family worship and the literacy movement. But as soon as possible Dr. Sung continued his journey to Peking. At Natiking, the national capital, he broke his journey to visit his former headmaster at the Memorial High School in Hinghwa, Rev. Francis P. Jones, Mr. Jones was now on the faculty of the Theological School connected with Girling University, the college John had once hoped to attend. After a few days spent with Mr. and Mrs. Jones investigating the course of theological training and the latest textbooks, he crossed the Yangtze River and journeyed north over the broad, brown plains of North China to Tientsin. It was the month of December. John felt like a stranger in a strange land. He was unfamiliar with the northern Mandarin dialect and he had not adequately prepared himself with warm clothing to face the fey winter winds which blow down from the Siberian plains,

His first visit was to the Rev. H. E. Dewey, a missionary Changli, near Tientsin. Mr. Dewey was also a graduate of Ohio Wesleyan University and knew all about John Sung. This friend uiged John not to spend too much time over the literacy move-thent. The need of the Chinch, he said, was for revival among the leaders and the rank and file alike.

After a brief visit to Shanhaikwan, where the Great Wall of China reaches the sea, John went on to Peking with an introduction to the Rev. R. W. Backus, who invited him to speak to a preachers' training class then in progress about his three years' rural work in Pukien.

Proceeding to Paoting, John suffered terribly from the bitter cold. There he found church life at a low ebb, and only half a dozen of the over 500 schoolchildren attended a miceting to hear him speak! He went on to Tinghsien to visit the renowned Dr. James Yen. Dr. Yen was the originator and director of the experiment in mass education which had become woeld-famons. Dr. Sung was deeply impressed with what he saw, but in a dream God spoke to him and showed him, in the well-known picture of the fig tree which had leaves but no fruit, that this vast undertaking, though successful in its own way, was without any spiritual value. So instead of staying one or two months as he had intended, he stayed only two days. He returned to Peking with a drepened awareness of his call to awaken aleeping and lakewarm chutches. Never before had he beeu so convinced that China's superare need was nothing but the simple gospel of the grace of God. Other things might have their place, but this need was paramount.

Refusing an invitation to stay on in Peking, John hastened back to Shanghai, where the well-known Japanese Christian, Dr. Tojohito Kagawa, was lecturing at Shanghai Christian University, Dr. Sung went to hear him and was disappointed to discover that his theme was the "social gospel". When the two doctors mer, the Japanese D.D. at once invited the "Chinese Kagawa" to address a prayer meeting. John, with regretful memories of his wasted years in America preaching the "social gospel", spoke faithfully on the power of the Blood of Jesus, the efficacy of the Cross, tho necessity of the new bitth and the importance of being filled with the Holy Spirtt. Sensing that this message was quite unwelcome to those who were sponsoring the meetings for Dr. Kagawa, John Sing declined to speak more than once. His position was already crystal clear.

position was already crystal clear.

At the South Gate "Pure Heart" High School of the American Presbyterian Mission, where Mis. Millican had arranged meetings, Dr. Sung's personal testimony and his expositions of Scripture resulted in some of the boys and girls being awakened to their need. There were further opportunities for testimony at the Christian and Missionary Alhance church in North Szechwan Road and elsewhere. But John was dissatisfied with himself and without any confidence in his message.

without any confidence in his message.

As reports of Di. Sung's presence in the city and of his unusual testimony spread, invitations to speak at different churches began to reach him from all parts of the city. One place that John wanted to visit especially was the Bethel Mission. Dr. Mary Stone and Miss Jenny Hughes, the leaders of this work, had already heard from the Rev. Andrew Gih teports of Dr. Sung's work in Fukien, and recognized in him one who was in complete systemathy with the Bethel vision for the evangelization of China. It was during special meetings conducted in Shanghai in 1922 by

It was during special meetings conducted in Shanghai in 1922 by Rev. Seth Rees and life son, Dr. Paul S. Rees, later to be associated with Dr. Billy Graham in his great crusades, that Andrew Gih was brought into an experience of the Spirit-filled life. In 1925, when Mr. Paget Wilkes from Japan was one of the speakers at another series of convention meetings, Andrew Gih heard the call to form the Bethel Worldwide Evangelistic Band. This and other Bands had for five years been travelling far and wide with their message of revival for the churches and salvation for the multitudes still outside the Church.

John Sing was given a warm welcome at Bethel and was at once invited to address a meeting of high school and mursing students at the daily chapel service. He spoke on the Feeding of the Five Thousand and challenged his hearers aftesh with Chitia's need and the only way in which it could be met John swept away every argument for not accepting. Christ from their minds and completely captured their hearts. When he was asked to continue with some Bible study meetings, he did so, but although he excited enthusiasm over his original expositions he felt that there was no power in the message. The problem on his mind was how the power to bing people to Christ could be released.

When Andrew Gih and Frank Ling invited him to go north

When Andrew Gih and Frank Ling invited him to go north with them on one of their tours, he felt that he could not accept. It seemed that his first duty was to return home to Hinghwa.

CHAPTER, TEN

A Night to be Remembered

T was still mid-winter and John Sung was audiously awaiting a ship to take him back home, when a pressing invitation reached him from Nauchang, provincial capital of Kiangsi, from the Rev. William E. Schubert of the Merbodist Episcopal Mission.

"It recognized in the invitation to Nanchang", John records, "the clear guidance of God. This was to be the turning-pount in my whole ministry—the end of going round in circles in the atmosphere of talk about 'movements' and 'education', 'sacrifice' and 'service'. Had I remned to Hinghwa, I might never have accomplished anything for God. All my work up to this time had been lacking in direction and puepose, I had been taying to serve God within the framework of biberal Christianity, I did not fit m, but I saw no way out! My visit to Nanchang brought the light and direction I needed and the future suddenly seemed bright with promise! The Lord Jesus said of Himself: "The Son of Man is come to seek and ro save that which was lost.' Alas, many Christian workers spend their time talking about 'movements'; one new movement follows another and when all has been said and done men's heater remain numoved and souls remain unsaved. They forget that the Lord came to save sinners. The salvation of sinners is the only thing that matters!"

Civil war was taging in Kiangsi between the Nationalists and the Communists, and the Bethel friends strongly advised him against making the journey. But, assured that this was a call from God, he postponed his return bome and, braving the dangers of which he had heen warned, he set off up the River Yangtze by steamer. Little did he know that Mr. Schubert and a Chinese colleague had prayed for a whole month in 1930 for revival in their church, but without any apparent results. On January 1st, 1931, they had begun to pray again, and continued to do so for fifty days, pleading with God for new life to be brought to a dead church. Then, in the middle of February, John Sung arrived !

Revival meetings were comparatively unknown in Nanchang and the first week found only eighty or nitery people present. There were no particular itsults evident. During the second week Dr. Sung spoke to the children in the schools, but again without any results. He began to examine himself and to ask why it was that people were not being saved. He admitted to himself that hitherto he had offer been content with giving people what they wanted to hear, but now be desired only their spiritual profit. One night after he had tetted be beard the sound of praying upstairs. It was his host pleading with God for revival: "Lord, let me see revival in Nanchang or let me go home to America!" John Sing got our of bed, got dressed and he roo knelt by his bed to pray; "Lord, what about me? Do I really want to see revival? Oh, reveal Thy power! Use us! We are looking to Thee!"

In answer to this prayer, God showed John that if the light of tennity was to shine into hearts, it was for him to draw aside the curtains of sin. He was to attack the strongholds of sin in the human heart before any victory could come to the Christian Church, What a memorable night that was—March 5th, 1931! He had at last received the direction he had so long sought. No longer was he merely to expound the "mysteries" of God's Word, but he was to deal with sin's power over men's hves. That same night God gave to him clear messages based on the stories of the Gadarene demoniac and the Prodigal Son, and a message on hypocrisy—messages which were to be repeated again and again with undiminishing effectiveness in bringing people to repentance.

There was a further week of meetings in Nanchang, when there were immediate signs of the Spirit's working, John had not yet seached the point of invising people to come to the front, but be used to give an opportunity for anyone who wanted to lead in prayer to do so. Some of those prayers were never finished, except in tears. It is only when people are convicted of sin that they gladly recognize their need of a Saviour. But at this stage John encouraged those under conviction to go home and confess their sins to God alone, as he himself had done. He asked for no public demonstration of their desire to repent.

As the attentiance and the blessing grew, the leaders decided to call in all the church workers and evangelists in the district for special meetings. The church leaders wired to Hinghwa for an extension of Dr. Sung's leave of absence, and Dr. Sung, while waiting for the commencement of the special meetings, went further up the river to visit Kinkiang.

At Kinking, the soil seemed to have been well prepared. The church was more alive. About 400 attended the first meeting and received Dr. Sung with enthusiasm. Almost all the Methodist

High School boys and girls—about 220 of them—turned to the Lord during the subsequent meetings and organized ovangelistic bands to witness for Chrisi in their spare time. Kinkiang had never experienced anything like this before!

Returning to Nanchang, Dr. Sung insisted that he must have the full prayer backing of the missionaries and the church and school leaders if the walls of this particular Jericho were to fall. He was never tired of insisting that revival blessing depended less on the piracher dian on the prayers of the Christians.

In the weck's meetings for the schoolchildren and the teaching staff which preceded the main conference he preached on the subject of sin every night. Mercilesily he exposed the sins of unbelievers and professing Christians alike. The Holy Spirit added His conviction and young and old were completely broken down. John had had no thought other than of a quiet work of the Spirit in the hearts of the children. He had never expected any outward evidences of the Spirit's power or that He would lay hold of people in such a spectacular way. But that is what happened, There were many outward signs of deep distress.

Children and their teachers were alike affected and altogether 180 came to Christ in confessions of their sins and were added to the church. The children confessed their sins to God and to one another, while the Principal of the school and his colleagues confessed their faults to one another. Sin was put away, restitution was made where required and many were freed from a terrible bondage.

During the second week, the main conference meetings were specially for the church workers and members of the Evangelistic Society. Dr. Sung preached daily about the need for being clean vessels if they were to receive the fullness of the Holy Spirit for Christian service. The young people who had got right with God during the first week were still present and were now praying for their parents and elders that they and all the workers in the church might become holy vessels in God's service. This was too himiliating and too shocking to the conservative Chinese mind and strong opposition was expressed to such an unheard-of practice. Some who refused to repent accused Dr. Sung of stirning up the children against their parents!

As soon as term ended for the Spring Festival, John took many of the young people to a marby mountain resort for a training school in evangelism. Then rogether they went out in bands into the villages proclaiming Christ and praying for the people. The enthinsiant grew. Some of the offended evangelists and school-teathers overcame their prejudices and joined the young people, until finally there were over zoo out preaching the gospel. On the last day, they were all caught in a thanderstorm and were soaked to the skin, but at the farewell meeting for Dr. Sung the same night all barriers seemed to be broken down. The showers of spirinal blessing now fell. These who had been most critical came under conviction of Divine judgment and cried to God with tears for forgiveness. Everyone joined together in praying for the felling of the Holy Spirit.

When the news of the revival in Nanchang reached Kinkiang, the Kinkiang church insisted on Dr. Sung returning there for several days to bring them a like blessing. As a result of the faithful prayers of God's people and the searching preaching of the evangelist, the dead, cold charches of Nanchaug and district wore wonderfully revived and a great victory won. One of the missionaries wrote in the summer of 1931: "We are having a hible revival in Nanchang and Kinkliang. . . . Dr. Sung can take any Bible passage you suggest and make it live as I have heard almost no other man do. He still spends bours daily with the Book, and that is the secret of his success." John Sung himself was confirmed even more clearly in his own mind that his was to be a message to the churches of China which would expose sin and declare God's remedy for it in the Cross. He felt commissioned to emphasize the uselessness of an empty religious profession without an experience of new life in Christ through the new birth.

Said John after the time in Nanchang: "The experience here has taught me the three secrets of revival: (1) A thorough confession of sin. (2) Prayer for the fullness of the Holy Spirit. (3) Public witness for Christ, I had previously read John Wesley's biography and how, every nime he pteached, people were convicted and came to Christ. I had often longed for the same experience. Now I had begun to witness something like it. May the Spirit of Truth lead me on to greater things for the glory of God and the salvation of men!"

The testimonies of converts in Nanchang began to find their way into Christian periodicals and Dr. Sung's reputation spread. Invitations from widely scattered places poured in upon him, He first went to Wulin. Then he fulfilled several ringagements in Shanghai, where the first was an eighty-day retreat for church leaders of all churches at the Bethel Mission. John Sung was the main speaker, but was assisted by some of the Bethel workers. It was here that he began to invite people out to the front to get right with God. There were again all the signs of a real work of the Holy Spirit. Over 300 people went forward in deep distress to cooffess their sins to God. When they had made a clean hreast of all sin, joy filled their bears and the Holy Spirit in His fullness came in. John concluded that "an evangelist must always give the people an opportunity to express their decision openly and to confess their sins. Then he must be ready to comfort the broken-hearted."

There followed meetings in the Moore Memorial Church, a fine building opposite the Racecopies. There were over 1,000 present, and many went to the front to seek salvarion. In some of these meetings, the Rev. Beverley Ho, who later served God in Java and the Philippines, was the song-leader.

An invitation now came from Nanking. There he was at first invited to speak from 11 to 12 a.m., daily at the second session of a retreat for preachers and Bible-women of the five Methodist Mission districts. The invitation was later extended to two sessions daily, so greatly was Sung's message needed and appreciated. The speaker who led the first session in the morning before Dr. Sung was a sophisticated, scholarly professor from Yenching University in Peking. Both men were guests of Rev. and Mrs. F. P. Jones. The professor had heard about John Sung and out of curiosity decided to hear him. The first few days he was rather critical, Then one moon at luncheon he remarked: "You know, I have not been reading my Bible enough lately!" Before the streat was over, John Sung had completely won him to a new life of dedication to Christ.

At Nanking, John was very tired and had some trouble with his heart. He was invited back to Bethel for a week's rest, but accepted the invitation on condition that he should be allowed to preach once a day! So meetings were arranged for the Bible School students. But soon the 200 nursing students were deserting their lectures to attend. Preaching with tremendous energy, his words flowed out like a mighty cascade. The Holy Spirir carried bome the message, and not only were 110 young people saved, but a Nightingale Club was formed to pray for the conversion of every student nurse and every patient in the bospital. Mere interest on the occasion of John Sung's first visit was now real nevival. The Bethel leaders had no hesitation in inviting Dr. Sung to return to Bethel to take part in the great annual Bible

Conference in August,

The doctor advised a six months' test on account of his heart, but John fels that this trouble had a spiritual origin. What he was really suffering from was pride! While at Nanking Miss Flla Leveritt of the Methodus Episropal Church in Changchow, a chy near the silk manufacturing rown of Wusih, had invited him there. Thinking that the city was only a small place, John had declined the invitation. The Bethel Band, he now discovered, went anywhere, whether the place was small or big and the people few or many. So John decided that there were things he could learn from them and that they had a contribution which would make up for his own deficiencies. The Berkel Band had hastily returned from Shantung for the funeral of "Mother" Stone who was translated on April 25. They now accepted the invitation which he had refused, so he decided to go along with them to Changehow. Though he only preached once a day, his heart suddenly pained him again one day as he was preaching. But he carried on. If this was to be his last sermon on earth, he would give himself to it, he would discharge his debt to the lost, he would seek God's glory alone! "Praise to our wonder-working God", he says. "He had mercy on my physical weakness and healed me even as I was preaching with my usual vigorii. Henceforth I will live only for the One who saves me and heals all my discases.

The Rev. Andrew Gili, leader of the Band, who had been delayed in Shanghai by the illness of his mother, now joined the team to intripret for Dr. Sung. This was the beginning of a happy and fruitful association between the two evangelists. He arrived just after the evening meeting and, still wearing his raincoat, he led to Christ a girl who later went to the China Bible Seminary in Shanghai and dedicated her life and gifts to the services of the Lord. She became one of Dr. Sing's most faithful fellow workers—the fuse-finit of the joint efforts of the two men!

On returning to Shanghai, John was mee with invitations from many churches to conduct meetings, but he decided to accept the renewed invitation from the Worldwide Bethel Evangelistic Band to rriturn with them to Shanting. At the port town, of Tsingtao, new problems confronted him, The so-called "Spiritual Gifts" movement was strong there and many were seeking the fullness of the Spirit with outward manifestations: the speaking with tongues; spiritual songs; visions; dreams and similar plumoment. It was regalded as a mark of spirituality to seek these things, John was mystified. He wanted to help them, but he did not know how. So he began to pray for wisdom and light on this problem and for a fresh understanding of Divine truth. From Tsingtao, the Band went on to Tabsingting, the veteran Pastor

Ting Li-mer's home town.

"When we reached Tahsingting", John recalls, "my mind was in such confusion that I had no heart to preach. I preferred to sit and listen to Andrew Gih. One day, as Andrew preached on the Samaritan woman, I saw the light. The fullness of the Holy Spirn means that the believer has a spring within and that the rivers of living water flow out unto everlasting life! Yes; that was it! Many thirsty people do not know how to come to the Lord to drink from this inexhaustible spring, Instead they exert tremendous effort carrying their clamsy buckets to some distant well whose water gets less and less, while the weight on their shoulders gets heavier and heavier. Will they ever find rest? After they have drink they must draw again; the more they draw, the thirstier they become. Draw-drink-weariness—the codless cycle! And still no rest! After they have done all they can, their thirst remains unquenched! Dear brothren and sisters, why don't you see that when sin goes one the living waters flow in? Don't go on carrying your load of sin to the stagnant waters of the well. The blessing of God is not in seeking satisfaction in tongues and dieans, but in becoming an empty, clean channel through which the water of the Spirit can flow out to the dry and thirsty hearts around, causing them to become fruitful too. Thus 'give up' is the secret of 'get'. A love-inspired witness is the true way to seek and to maintain the fullness of the Spirit. For me, the Tsingtao problem was solved?"

At Tsimu, the Band heard with sorrow of the death of Miss

Dota Yü, one of China's leading Christian women. Andrew Gih also received news of the illness of his grandmother and, leaving John Sung in charge, he left for Shanghai. It was here that John began to make the emphasis that God had recently shown him. And it was here that the first preaching band was organized since he lad been working with the Bethel Band. Moving on to Tsinan, the provincial capital, he again preached on the Samarizan woman with great ficedoin and power. Sung had been gaining confidence steadily and now felt that he was really finding his feet. The extensionant rectod was endine.

experimental period was ending
From Tsinan, the Band went on to Tsinan, the city at the foot of one of China's famous mountain beauty spots. The grave of Conflictus lies close by. Though previously a strong centre of Christian life, Satan had been very busy making havor of the church. A wave of anti-Christian animosity had swept over the community; chutches had been wrecked, mussion schools forced to close and some of the pastor compelled to flee with their families. One day in June the Bethel Band arrived and put up in a house which had been thoroughly looted of all the furniture except the brick bed which is a part of the structure of most houses it North China. Here, in this centre where the Christians were greatly discorraged after their terrible experiences, Dr. Sung was greatly used of God. There were 103 new convects. One of them was a youth of only mneteen who had broken every one of the Ten Communiquents, but who heard the sermou on the Prodigal Son and came back to God in true repentance. And there were many others like him.

In response to an urgent appeal from a missionary in another part of the same province the Band went, fixed as they were, and embacked on a programme of seven meetings a day! The church was a large but cold and formal one. However, things soon began to change. The hright music attracted the crowds. The first response was among the boys and girls in the mission schools and every child professed to accept Cluist. At the meetings for the adults, the Holy Spurr broke in in an amazing way. Conviction of sin, confusion, cleansing in the Precious Blood, great joy and spontaneous testimony were again the features of His working. Every night the people went out into the streets on their way home, singing as they went.

But not everyone was in sympathy. One of the missionaries in this city told Dr. Sung that he did not believe in the Second Coming of Christ, that the Old Testament was unreliable and that be objected to talk about the Blood of Christ and the Holy Spirit. Not knowing Dr. Sing's history, he asked him one day what his opinion was about science and religion. Dr. Sung's reply was: "Science is good, but it cannot save people from their sins!" And when the missionary singgested that the highest type of Christian was represented by men like Dr. Harry Emerson Fosdick and Mahatma Gaudhi, Dr. Sung's response was: "China does not need the teaching of Fosdick on Gandhi, The teaching of Confincins is better far that titiers. What the Chinese need is Jesus Christ and His Cross. People talk about Fosdick, but what do they know about him? I have studied under him and I rejected his teachings utterly and finally." At the service which followed, Dr. Sung preached on Calvary, and over 100 stayed to pray and to pledge themselves to take up the Cross and to follow Christ. What better illustration of his thesis than this could there have been!

The city of Tenghsien was the chief centre of one of the higgest missions in China, There were several large educational institutions there: a theological seminary for men and women, a Bible School, a high school and a primary school. The seminary was one of the few in China ar that time true to the whole Bible. None of the four young evangelists had completed a theological training and the prospects of this campaign were rather formidable. At the early meetings government school students, filled with the current ann-Chinatian sentiment, came to make trouble but they were won over and many accepted Christ in the following days. Then the meetings moved to the Seminary and God began to work in the hearts of many of the students there as one after another was convicted of sin and was led to make confession. One night there were 300 people seeking to get right with God and with one another, amid scenes of deep distress and rearful repentance. The news of this revival spread and many more came in from the country to attend the meetings. The largest building in the city was filled to overflowing. As in was confessed and pni away, waves of joy seemed to sweep through the congregation. Praises mingled loudly with the prayers. The gills of the high school rose from their knees and stood in groups with their arms around one another singing praises to the Lord. The sermons were somenimes cut short by someone who could not wait to make restitution or confession to someone else present. One aged pastor confessed a sin of thirty-seven years previously which had been weakening his power as an evangelist. The Registrar at the hospital had for years been misappropriating funds and he now reckoned up the total amount of his thefts and male full restitution to the hospital there and then. "Praise the Lord!" sounded from many lips as testimonies to God's working in hearts were given. People set free from sin's hondage sang exuberantly:

Jesus breaks every fetter! Jesus sets me free!

The glosy of the Lord scened to fill the place and there were many who opened their hearts to the infilling of the Holy Spirit for the first time.

August drew near. The prospects for a large attendance at the Shanghai Bible Conference were not very bright. Civil war and large-scale banditry were disrupting communications and discouraging travel. But the plans went ahead, Preachers and Christian workers from all the centres Dr. Sung had visited during the year as well as from elsewhere sent in registrations in such numbers that there was difficulty in arranging accommodation for them all. Over 700 delegates came, some from long distances which necessitated dangerous journeys. With the crowds who came from all over Shanghai to attend, there were over 1,200 people crowded into the Bethel Church. Dr. Sung had been asked to draw up a tentative programme. The key word was "Revival". The speakers were to be the Rev. Andrew Gih, Dr.

John Sung and the Rev. L. C. Ting. The topics at the sessions throughout the day were Prayer Revival, Song Revival, Bible Revival, Service Revival and Testimony Revival. At the Bible Revival session, Dr. Sung spoke on "A Bunch of Keys to the Word". Then under the title of "Service Revival" he expounded the Book of Acrs.

The emphasis through the entire conference was on the need for a nation-wide evangelism in China. Every speaker urged that China must be evangelized quirkly. There was no time to waste. To this end, everyone present was challenged to get right with God, seek deliverance from sin and claim the power of the Holy Spirit to do great things in the Name of Christ. Dr. Sung, despite the great heat that sent him from the platform after every service wirls his cotton garments drenched in perspiration, preached with his characteristic originality and drama. With intense fervour, he spoke of the importance of becoming holy if evangelism was to bear fruit. At the end of every address, he would appeal in his rasping voice and with deep feeling: "O friends, are you ready for the task? Are your hands clean for the work? Do you know the power of the Holy Ghost in your lives? Call on God for it! Prepare for the work! Pray! Stand up and pray! Reach out and take hold of God!" And the great company would rise and, all praying out loud together, would plead for themselves and for the Christless millions of China. Every province but one was represented. As hands were upraised in supplication, it seemed as if, like Either of old, these people were reaching out to touch the sceptre of the King for their loved country's sake. Oh, how they prayed! Not once a day, but after every session, until it could be seen from the shining faces of the delegates as they left the church that their prayers had been answered. The closing testimony meeting went on for hours. No one could stop it. Pastors of leading churches testified with shame to fruitless lives, to indifference to the condition of those without Christ and to lack of real interest in God's work. But they could also speak of the new vision that had come and the new purpose that had been born to spend and be spent for God. Schoolboys and girls, too, testified to their conversion and determination to win all their schoolfellows to Christ. Those were hallowed days of blessing and great joy. It was more than over clear that Dr. Sung was an instrument God had raised up for such a time in the history of the nation and of the Church in China.

CHAPTER, ELEVEN

With Bethel in Manchuria

In the antumn of 1931, the political tention was almost at breaking-point. Japan's designs were already clear and Manchuria was under the threat of aggression. Audrew Gis, the leader of the Bethel Worldwide Evangelistic Band, had intended to visit Manchuria and Mongolia in the spring, but open doors in other provinces had kept the Band fully busy right up to the time of the Conference. It now seemed even more intent for the Band to go to the "Three North-eastert Provinces", the name by which all Chinese know Manchuria.

The other original members of the Band were Frank Ling from Foochow, Lincoln Nich and Philip Lee. The two latter were in their late teens and all three were musical, especially Philip Lee, who had a trained tenor voice and could play almost any wind or stringed instituted. After the Summer Conference, Andrew Gih invited John Sting to join them formally, even though he well knew that he himself, the leader of the Band, would henceforth be less prominent than the now famed Dr.

As a result of the Summer Conference, the Britiel Brinds had agreed to emphasize in all their campaigns (our important features of a healthy church life; the Watch-tower or prayer meeting; Evangelistic Bands, composed of new converts and others: Bible Classes for effective follow-up work; and the institution of family worship in the home. The influence of Dr. Sing's experience in Fukien and Central China is plain. A "Watch-tower" was ser up in a room at Bethel where every day from early morning until late at night someone was always at prayer for the work of the the several Evangelistic Bands.

The plan of campaign was for the regular members of the Worldwide Evangelistic Band to Jeave for Mancharia at the end of August, while Dr Sung returned to Fukien to take his wife home. Then John Sung and Frank Ling were to nicet the other three at Dairen. Let John Sung relate the story of his journey home in his own words:

"Now that I had a message, I was ready to go anywhere to lead revival meetings. But God still had a lesson of obedience to teach me. As a result of this experience, it was indelibly impressed on me that I could all my hie safely place myself in the keeping of a loving, alonighty, nucleaugeable Lord who never makes a mistake. I had but to walk in His ways and He would bear the full responsibility of earing for me. Even if this took we through the valley of the shadow of death, there would be nothing to fear:

so long as the Lord was with me.

"My wife had also been one of those attending the Bethel Conference. I myself had not yet formally joined the Bethel Worldwide Band, hur in order to set myself free for the work, I decided to take my wife back home to Hinghwa. Even before we started on the jointney I had a God-given premonition that some special danger lay ahead. Was it to be pirates? or shipwreck? or serious illness? or violent death? I did not know. When the sailing of our ship was delayed, many of the passengers who had come from Fukien to attend the conference, decided to go ashore to buy sweets and bisenits etc. I jokingly tried to persuade them not to, saying that the sea was going to be rough. But they just smiled or rebuked me for saying such an unlucky thing! They could not be blamed. Had we known the danger that Lay ahead, none of us would ever have gone on board. But to know God's will and not to obey robs us of peace. It is bettee to obey the will of God and die in the doing of it than to disobey and live. However, I felt in my own heart that the coming danger, whatever it was, would not be into death. My life work was not to end so soon!

"The name of the briat was Tong Kaug. I had loss $10 soon after going on board, I was afraid and wanted to run away, but God would not let me. So I had to follow on. The first day out, the wind and the sca were calm, the ship was well loaded and there was no motion. Everyone was happy. Then the second day, one of the boilers exploded. The ship took on a dangerous list and most of the passengers became senously alarmed. I suggested a prayer meeting, but there was little response. Then the second and last boiler exploded too and the ship came to a standard.

The hull sprang several leaks and the sea poured in. The crew jettisoned the cargo to lighten the ship but the water continued to gain ground and pumping could not keep pace with it. The noise of agonized weeping was now heard on all sides and everyone feared that there was no hope. The ship would normally sink in a few hours' time. We must pray! I again called a prayer meeting and some of the non-Christians joined us. We prayed and I silently looked to God, thinking inevitably of St. Paul's journey to Italy. Beheving that God was going to answer prayer, I, like Paul, comforted the passengers. Meanwhile we looked out over the ocean, hoping to see another vessel coming to our rescue. About noon we sighted a large ship in the distance and everyone was as overjoyed as if they had discovered a new continent! But, to our great dismay, it turned out to be a Japanese vessel! Would they save us or leave us to perish? Joy gave place to renewed feat. Death seemed nearer than ever, Finally, I led the passengers in shorting "Help us! Help us!" in English, while we waved a red flag. The Achiyana Mara then turned in our direction and came within halling distance. She only had one lifeboat to bold ten so had to make a number of trips. The passengers, fearing that the ship would saik before it returned, surged to the from to be the first to be taken off. One woman who had with her her life savings of $600 in goods which she would have to leave behind jumped into the water and was drowned. One of the men was careless and fell overboard as the boat listed and was also drowned. Another man who was being hauled up the side of the rescue vessel did not have enough strength to hold on and fell back into the sca. What sights those were! And when men are sinking in a world of sin, it is just the same. They cannot trust in their own strength or save themselves. Unless they cast away their worldly gains and go on board the ark, how can they hope to reach the other side of this sea of sorrow safely?

"When everyone had been taken on hoard the Japanese vessel, the Ting Kang still did not sink. Something scenced to be keeping her afloat. (She was subsequently towed into port by the Wan Hising and the passengers were able to recover their personal baggage.) Though we had been saved, food was very short, but we were soon in Auroy, where we were all cross-examined about the accident and kept for a day or two before we could go our several ways.

"After such an experience, how could I not think of God's will as good and perfect. 'All things work together for good to them that love God...' God had enabled me to obey His will in a great trial and should I not all the more despise the world and eatnestly seek that inheritance incorruptible and undefiled and that fadeth not away. I had also been used to comfort others and to see more clearly than ever the tisk which had been intusted to me: that of vaving men, at all times and in every place."

When the news of this adventure became known, there was deep grantitude to God in the hearts of Christians all over China that John Sung's life had been spared. At home old Pastor Sings was surprised and delighted at the evident change in his son and the new power in his pleaching. But John could not tarry. He had an appointment in Manchinela for which he was already late.

He took leave of his family once more and proceeded to Shanghai to join Frank Ling with an inward conviction that in Manchuria there were bittet experiences and heavy cross-bearing ahead. But, for himself, he says, inspired by his recent experience, he was determined that "as always, so now also Christ shall be imagnified in my body, whether it he by life or by death".

The two men joined the other members of the Band, who had already had good meetings in Darren, at Fengfungehen. The triemnal conference of one of the Lutheran missions was in progress, with 200 delegates from all over Manchuria present. The invitation to the Band to speak was somewhar reluctant. Lincoln Nich led the singing and introduced the people to some of the Bethel choruses, while Philip Lee sang. Then John Sung gave his testimony, speaking with great power. When an appeal was made, twenty-five Chinese and two missionaries went to the front. They there poured out their hearts in prayer before God, confessing their sins with many tears. But some of the missionaries objected to the "excitement" and the loud praying. The next day, they sent a Chinese deputation to say that no further invitations to preach would be given to the Band unless they lowered their voices, used no gestures and prayed quietly. How could men whose hearts were affame accept such limiting testrictions? When It was announced that business meetings would take the place of all other planted meetings on the Monday, the Band parked up their belongings and, thanking God that they had been accounted worthy to suffer shame for His Name, left on the night train. They were seen off just before midrught by many of the delegates and one of the missionaries, who was almost heautbroken over what had raken place. A Post Office official who was meeting the train came up to Dr. Sung to tell him that, listening to him outside the chapel the night before, he had decided to trust Christ. Their witness had not been in vain!

One of the things that saddened Dr. Sung was that the missionatics had used the threat of the withdrawal of funds to the church if they did not withdraw their invitation to the Bethel Band. This led Dr. Sung to write in his joincral: "Believed fellow workers and fellow Christians! Why do you still depend on the financial support of foreigners? You should look to the Lord of all things and realize that the time has come for the church to be self-propagating, self-governing and self-supporting—truly independent."

From Jengfangchen, the Band went to Mikden, arriving a week ahead of schedule. As things turned out, their visit proved to be just on the eve of the "Mukden incident", when the Japanese Imperial Army seized the city as a prelude to occupying the whole of Manchuria. This was the event which eneaged China, shocked the world and eventually led to war with China after the League of Natious had failed to act to stop aggression. At this crisis in the city's history and in contrast to what had happened at Fengfangelsen, the Band was to be God's instrument in bringing about the greatest revival die Chinich in Minkden had ever experienced. And this is not overlooking the revivals that faid attended the ministry of Jonathan Goforth in Manchuria. At first, attendance at the meetings was small, but ten responded to the appeal the first eventing. The next monthing at 5.30 a.m. the church was full. Twemy-seven meetings were held in all and over 1,000 people confused their sins and made profession of faith in Christ. There was increasing joy as the days went on at the great things God was doing for that city. Dr. Sting wrote to Dr. Mary Stone, Jr., and Miss Highes:

"... Before leaving Shanghai for Manchinia the Holy Spirit forefold me that we should be led by Hun into the wilderness to be tried. Now we find we are really in the wilderness, and actually have met three kinds of temptation.

"The first trial is to change stones into bread. We thought that the Conference to which we had been invited to speak would give us an open door to Manchuria because in that Conference all the preachers and workers of that Massion throughout Manchuria can be reached... But this is not the way of our Loed. He did not allow us to change the stones into bread. The missionaries with fixed idras and those preachers with traditional opinions are in the eyes of the Lord merely stones. The Lord can change them into bread, but they would not let Him do it. We are glad we were thiven out from that place because this experience has helped the young evangelists to be himble, not to be too ambitions and try to turn the world upside down in one minute's time.... All that I left there was my personal testimony.... Of course, after leaving there we prayed more for the Holy Spirit's guidance.

"Thank God, the name of the next place we came to means Listen to the Will of Heaven'! Several great evangelists have been here. They helped create a spiritual appetite. On our part our previous experience taught us to trust more in prayer and hving upon the Word of the Lord, for one day we prayed together eight or ten rimes, something we had never done before. Here we found the key for revival. After the shame of the Cross there was the glory of the Resurrection and for this reason we have had about 1,000 sound conversions and 279 beautiful testimonies have been handed to me. Now Bands have been organized among the converts. This is the greatest revival I have ever seen in my life. Praise His 1401v Name!"

The campaign over, the train carrying the Band to rheir next destination in Heilungkiang Province pulled out of Mukden on the monting of September 18th. It was the last train to leave the capital before the Japanese took over control of the city! Chaos and confusion reigned there, but it the leasts of limithede of new believers there was nothing hur the peace and joy of sin forgiven.

Everywhere the fair of widespread hostilities caused the Christians to advise the Band to go back home, but as doors opened in city after city they felt that God was leading them on. "This may be our last opportunity—and Manchurta's!" It was —before Manchuria became a pupper Japanese state. Right up to Hailar, last big city on the railway before it crosses the Russian fronter at Manchult to jour the Trans-Siberian line, the Band went. Fear of bombing was keeping people from travelling and the trains were almost empty. Officials were suspicious of the five young men so near the frontier and interrogation gave opportunities for many a personal restimony. At Hailat, the church was in a sad condition under "an unconverted pastor and two worldly elders", one of whom was engaged in samuggling. At the first meeting thirty people professed faith in Christ, and there might have been many more had the Band not been forced to leave the city by oews of heavy bombing of the trilways and the possibility of bring cut off. Harbin was therefore reached two weeks ahead of schedule.

Prior to the arrival of the Band in Harbin, the Chinese National Council and the Syriod of the Methodist Episcopal Church in Mikden had raised a sum of money for a special retreat for all the Harbin Chinese chinches which were in danger of isolating themselves from fellowship with the other churches of Harbin and China. They were sadly divided among themselven and torn by bittet rivalry. Three of them had driven out the missionaries in an endeavour to prove that the Church was not the "running dog of the foreigner". The difficulties were so great that the proposed retreat scened doomed to failure. Pastors of the larger churches where the meetings would have to be held refused to agree to the speakers suggested, and the missionaries who were belitted the plan were almost in despair.

Dr. and Mrs. Deming were stationed in Harbut at the time. Just as Mrs. Deming was at her wirs' end, the pastor of the Chinese Methodist Church led in the five young men, who had arrived so unexpectedly following the curtailed Hatlac campaignt. Dr. Deming was away, but Mrs. Deming soon recognized in Dr. Sung the same young man whom she and her husband had betirended in New York at Union Theological Seminary and of whom they had read such glowing reports in the Bible Union for

China magazine,

Would the local Christians receive these young men after rejecting other "big speakers"? They did, and all the churches except one decided to unite for meetings to be held in the large Union Chutch. It was Saturday when the Band arrived. The same evening, the first hastily arranged meeting was held. A Japanese plane had been circling over the city during the day and during the meeting there were two loud explosions. But no one took any notice. The cheerful singing and the happy team work of the Band held the attention of everyone. Dr. Sung preached, and at more gripped his audience with his graphic style and burning real. As he finished, wer with perspiration in spite of the winter temperature ontside, Andrew Gill gave the appeal and conducted the after-meeting. Meetings were arranged from seven to nine every morning and from five to seven every evening, Pastor Gill preaching in the mornings and Dr. Sung in the evenings. During the hours between, the individual members of the Band were free to visit the many churches of the city—Chinese, Korean, Russian and even German. Only one of the churches frowned on their indecorous evangelism and refused their cooperation. The campaign brought to Harbin the first real newival the Chinese churches of the city had ever experienced. Among those who found Christ personally for the first time were several leading laymen and lay preachers and a Y.M.C.A. secretary who had been creating serious (rouble among the churches, Mussionaries, pastors and cluttelt workers, some of whom had not spoken to one another for months, mer at the communion rail and asked forgiveness of one another. There was a great putting right of wrongs, an unreserved consecration of many young lives, hundreds of conversions and hundreds more seeking the infilling of the Holy Spirit. The people crowded to the front of the church after every appeal to pray and to receive personal help.

The last meetings in the great church were packed and the people would hardly let the young evangelists go.

The main meetings over, Dr. and Mrs. Deming urged the

The main meetings over, Dr. and Mrs. Demning urged the Band to stay on for a few days, partly for a rest and partly to lead meetings in the newly erected Korean Methodsst Church at which Dr. Deming interpreted from English into Korean Twentry Koreans decided for Christ. The Band moved over from the Chinese Y.M.C.A., where they had been staying, to the Demings' home. Dr. Sung and Philip Lee were given the sixting-toom and the other three occupied Dr. Deming's study, Mrs. Deming delighted to attend to the personal needs of the Band: laundry, sewing, mending and the like. A young out-of-work tailor was employed to help the riten and he was surprised and deeply impressed to observe that the Band rose at 4.30 every morning for prayer and Bible study.

Dr. Sing daily went over his message with Frank Ling, his interpreter, however often he may have preached a similar sermon before. By the time the evening meeting was over Jolin was so completely exhausted that he would fiting himself on the bed to rest. As Mrs. Deming used to see the weary form lying there the Scripture came to her mind: "This is my body which is broken for you." John Sung was already living trp to the limit of his strength and, like his Lord, pouring out his life for God and

His hungering children. He was never long free from pain from the old wound left by the operation on his back in America and the pain always returned when he was overtued or upset. But, like Paul, he regarded this as his "thorn in the flesh" and was able to glory in his own weakness. "Were it not for this", he once "it would have been impossible to restrain my proud disposition." But after a rest John used to kneel up at the diningroom table, under a good light, and in fine, beautiful Chinese characters write up his journal. Wherever he wrut, this was an essential part of his daily tontine.

Frank Ling, who knew Dr. Sung so intimately, says of his life duting lus public ministry: "It was very simple; praying, writing up his diary, preaching and personal dealing and three meals a day. He wrote an average of several thousand words a day in his diary, including fiesh gleanings from the Scriptures, No Chinese can ever have devoted so much time and gone into such detail. Once, for example, after a meal in a Christian home, John's flickening writing-brush paused for a moment while he asked the name of one of the dishes they had caten! Dr. Sung believed that no detail of his life was too small to be unimportant in relation to his work. A peculiar liabit of his was to funger a few cubes of hambou from chopped-up chopsticks as he wrote his diaries or prepared his sermons. Some of these diaries were lost during the Sino-Japanese War, but the test remain in the possession of his family.

John was not an easy guest to entertain and lacked all the social graces. Among other things, be invariably ordered chicken prepared in the Chinese fashion in rich chicken sonp at least once a day. This earned him the nickname of "the chicken preacher"! But Mr. Ling explains: "If you have ever attended his meetings and seen how he preaches, often three times a day and as long as two hours at a time, exercing every ounce of his physical and nervous energy from beginning to end, you could nor blame him for asking for chicken soup to sustain him. Without special nourishment, he could never have kept up his strenuous work.

Describing the Mukden campaign, Dr. Sung continued in his letter to the Bethel headquarters; ". . . Then we came to Harbin. God just prepared workers and preachers for us to work with. He wanted us to learn how to work step by step and build the revival upon the rock. . . . We belped them realize the wonder and stability of the Bible. When this battle was won invitations came not only from the Chinese but from the Russian, Korean and German Churches. . . . Now we are beginning to meet our third temptation, 'Kneel down and you can have everything', We could stay in Harbin and work on with the Russian and German churches, thus opening the way for world-wide evangelism, but God wanted us to go forward and we have come to a small, cold place called Hulan. There is a bard battle ahead of us. Pray that we may be humble enough to meet this third and hardest trial. . . . Yours in sout-saving service, John

When D1. Sung left Harbin he took with him a large floursack full of letters and the Band undertook in time to answer them all. Most of them were just tesumonies of blessing received, but some were asking for help in spiritual publicus. The Harbin churches, once so divided, immediately aranged for united prayer meetings to be held in all the churches in rotation. Attendance at these meetings jumped and there was great joy at the rennion which the Holy Spirit had brought about and great liberty in prayer. Prayer groups were also formed in private hooses to keep the fires of revival burning.

After Harbin the Band divided into two: Dr. Song, Frank Ling and Plulip Lee went to Hulan and Sudiwa, while Andrew Gih and Lincoln Nich went to Asalur. At Hulan, the Principal of a large school run by the Y.M.C.A, and four of his teachers were converted together with most of the boys. Dr. Sung also preached on the Five Loaves and Two Fishes in a Russian church. As the Russian pastor interpreted, many were in tears and, at the invitation, fifty Russian Christians dedicated their lives for the evangelization of the Russians of Mauchutia, There was also a remarkable case of a demon-possessed man who had ten times burned his Bible at the demon's behest being completely delivered after prayer and the laying on of hands. The Chinese church only numbered about forty, but there were eighteen new conversions during the three days' meetings.

At Suthwa there was a hospital, a school, a church and several missionary residences all on the same "compound": a typical "mission station". Three meetings a day were arranged. As elsewhere in China, the spirit of intense nationalism was high and the workers. Chinese and missionary, were hopelessly disunited. Dr. Sung, conscious that he was under the direction of the Holy Spirit, was quite fearless and, as he so often did, acted in a most mexpected way. Having sensed the situation, Dr. Sung at one meeting took the step of calling all the leading nutses, doctors, teachers, Bible women, pastors and missionaries to stand in front of the large congregation. Then, addressing the people, he asked, "Do you love your leaders?" and, receiving the answer "Yes", he asked again; "Then what is your peayer for them?" "That they may be united in love and work together in unity!" came the answer. So everyone knelt to pray. As the people prayed, the leaders wept, but still would not confess their faults. The people prayed still more fervently while Dr. Sung asked each in turn: "Have you anything in your heart against anyone?" "Yes," several admitted. "I hate the inissionary!" "Then go and tell him so and ask his forgiveness!" was the reply. And they did so, Then, running to the missionary, he said: "You must have some sin to confess or all these people would not be hating you!" So the missionary confessed his failts. As Dr. Sung spoke to each, the Holy Spirit seemed to bring immediate conviction. Many of them came to his room later in an agony of conviction, begging him to pray for them. Some of the workers spent hours in prayer and confession before the peace of pardon came. As the meetings ended there was inbounded joy everywhere in place of the previous atmosphere of mine antagonism. Dr. Sung's train was to trave at 7.30 a.m., so, not to be deprived of one more meeting, about seventy gathered for a farewell service at 5.30 a.m., before daylight!

The two sections of the Band met again at Harbin for a few devotional meetings. Time was getting short, and it was crident that they would have to divide forces again if they were to respond to the invitations which were reaching them. But there seems to have been some disagreement about their plans and to settle the matter they drew lots. As a result, Andrew Gih went to Chaoyangchen while John Sung remained in Harbin for a day or two and then was to go to Changchun and Khin. It is tlear that the Enemy of souls was doing his best to hinder the work of the Holy Spirit by introducing differences of opinion among the five members of the Band. But they were aware of these attacks and no serious dissension was permitted to orise.

Dr. Sting gave his last messages to the chirich leaders in Harbin on the Book of Acts, teaching them the triths about the Holy Spirit. When the time came to leave by the night train, the Christians escorted them to the station to see them off. Right to the last moment Dr. Sting, leaning out of the carriage window, was giving texts with their references to all who asked for them, while Philip Lee, lying in the upper borth of the sleeper, shone an electric trach on the open Bible. The chorus singing was so lusty that the station guards came tushing tip to see what was going on! Other groups of Japanese and Russians were seeing off important officials. But who was this Dr. Sting who was aronsing such enchusiasm?

At Changeliun, where Andrew Gili had already beld meetings, Dr. Sung was invited to speak in the leading Chinese chirch, although the pastor said, "I do not believe in appeals and do not want anything emotional!" But as the Holy Spirit worked during the meetings the whole congregation rushed to the front to confess sin. Among them was their pastor who confessed especially the sin of dictating to the Holy Spirit.

At Kirin, Japanese troops were already in occupation. The Korean Christians had all been scattered or arcstod and the churches were full of apprehension. But one of the pastors, himself a well-known preacher, gave Dr. Sung a welcome. His was a flourishing church which had already been behind D1. Sung in prayer and sympathy. From this pastor, Dr. Sung learned like Chinese phrase for "laying hold" of God and His promises and be began to expect God to "lay hold" of sinners. He prayed with new faith in the promises of God. And there was manifestly a working of the Spirit of God in this city too. One pastor of another church bad forbidden his congregation to attend Di. Sing's meetings. But on the last night he came, God "laid hold" of him and he publicly confessed that for six years he had neither read his Bible nor had a morning "quiet time". There was a Christian doctor in the city, too, but he was too proud to kneel when he prayed. One day, while operating in the theate, his arm refused to respond to his brain. He fell immediately on his knees and cried to God to restote his arm and save the life of the patient, God heard his prayer, There was another man in the meetings who had been a "Boxer" in the 1900 opeising and had been guilty of the minder of a missionary. His arm had been paralysed ever since. One day he heatd Dr. Sinig ask, "Do you think that the Lord who saved the thief on the Cross can save you?" He immediately shouted out "Yes!" and instantly be recovered the use of his arm! The news of this miracle spread and many gave glory to God.

It was in Knin, too, that Dr. Sung was greatly exercised about the quistion of baptizing new believers. He and the pastor, against the custom of the missionary society which insisted on a long period of total before baptism, decided to baptize the 200 converts on the basis of such verses as "He that believed and is baptized shall be saved" and "What doth lunder me to be fraptized? . . . If thou believest with all thine heart, thou mayest." John Sung had never done such a thing before and so it was something of a red-letter day.

The weather was by this time getting very cold and John had insufficient warm clothing. So he "laid hold" of God's promises and asked for a skin-lined gown such as is worn in the north in the winter. Within a very short time, one of the Christians gave him the very thing he had asked for !

From Kirin, John and Frank proceeded to the Band rendezvous at the port city of Yingkow, calling at Chaoyangchen en route. At Yingkow, the Band again used the method of casting lots to decade who should go to the Bible School for meetings and who should hold meetings in the church. John went to the Bible School and was soon in fresh difficulties. His first address to the students was on the "new birth" and many came to the front to confess sin and get right with God. The School principal objected to Dr. Sung's preaching, claiming that all the students were already "saved". There was a theological argument. But among the students theological niceties had no place. They were experiencing a new work of the Holy Spirit in their hearts. Many prayed through the night and were filled with the Holy Spirit. Both Dr. Sung and the students learned much of praying through to victory and of spiritial warfare. Though his audiences at the Bible School were not large, the results were very farreaching.

To dulid a promise, Dv. Sing retirmed to Chaoyangeben for a few days. It was here that he preached for the first time his famous serimon on "Open the coffin," It was not enough, he insisted, to listen to a strmon. The coffin of our heats had to be opened and the dead works taken out, one by one! Many church leaders, some of whom had come over from Kirin, responsed and made public confession of sin. As Dr. Sing prayed for them and hid hands on theor, they were filled with the Spirit, many of them receiving the gifts of healing and of casting out demons. They returned to their own districts to exercise a powerful witness for Christ. The glory of God was once more revealed.

"First the Cross, then the glory!" seemed to summaize the campaigns in the "Three North-eastern Provinces", which were henceforth to be known as Manchinkuo so long as the Japanese remained in couried. Over 3,000 people alogether had professed conversion in those few autumn months of 1931 and at a time when the whole area was in a state of warfare and turnoil. The Manchurian churches had begun to think in terms of an annual Bethel Conference in Manchuria, seeing that it was so difficult for Manchurian Christians to travel to Shanghai. Plans were also set on foot for the Band to go to Korca during the summer of 1932, but political developments prevented these plans from ever being realized.

While the other members of the Band horried back to Shanghai via Dairen, Dr. Sung returned to Shantung in response to a special invitation from the American Southern Baptist Mission in Hwanghsien. This was a large mission centre with schools and a hospital. Here the missionaries were in complete sympathy and the hearts of the people hungry and ready for the blessing of the Lord. The Spirit of God worked and many hearts of stone became hearts of flosh. From Hwanghsien John went to Pingtu and found that God had already begun to work. The people had been holding prayer meetings and some had been convicted of sin. So when the message was proclaimed through God's servant, there was a great outpoiring of the Spirit. It was here diat one of the missionaries inged John to pray for some sick people, especially a Mrs. Lo, who had heren paralysed for eighteen years. After prayer and the laying on of hands, this woman was completely healed and for three more years continued to go around the contrayside witnessing to the great thing God had done for her. Though an illiterate woman, her restimony lit the fire of revival all over the Pingtu disiriet. Tenan was also revisited and the results of the earlier campaign were still evident in a greatly quickened church. As there had been a certain amount of speaking in "tongues" and stinging "spiritual Gufis" caregory of preachers. But John was well known for not advocating such things. His emphasis was not on such external experiences but on the life of witness. In Tsinan, John was invited to meet some of the Cheloo Christian Umiversity students in the home of Di. Thornton Stearns, Forty or fifty of them found Christ in a few days. From Tsinan John, would have returned by rail to Shanghai, but the service was interrupted. So he had to go by sea via Tsingtao. This gave him the opportunity to hold a few days' convention meetings there. He was especially careful to avoid suspicion of any extravagunt doctrines and carneedly warned the Christians against one-sided teaching. He urged them above all to follow the way of love. And so, after a remarkable tour in Shantung, he returned to Shanghai.

CHAPTER TWELVE

With Bethel in South China 1931-1932

N Shanghai the five young men, fresh from their hazardous and wonderfully successful campaign in Manchuria, requived a tremendous welcome. They had been travelling and prouching for four months. But instead of taking the rest they deserved, they plunged at once into evangelistic meetings at Betbel where there were many new unconverted students in the nursing school. Some accepted Christ at each meeting.

Suice the loss of Manchuria a threatening situation haddeveloped in China proper. Shanghai was the next objective on the Japanese programme. Political tension was high. It was in such an atmosphere that the Band conducted meetings in the large Allen Memorial Church in Chapei at the invitation of the Shanghai Ministrial Association. It was not expected that, under the circumstances, there would be many at the meetings. But, from the first night, January 1st, 1932, the church was crowded. The originally planned three days were extended for an extra three days and then again for four days more! For the last meeting, a densely packed audience crowded the church to overflowing, people from all the churches in Shanghai and many with no previous church connection being present. It was a wonderful climax to a campaign in which hundreds professed conversion and every church felt the breath of revival.

Two weeks later, at midnight on January 28th, was broke out. The Japanese army had landed at Woosing and was rapidly encircling the city, A heroic Chinese army fought fiercely but in vain. The Allen Memorial Church came under fire and some of the Chinese Christian workers were killed. Refugees poured into the safety of the International Settlement. The Bethel Mission had to evacuate its premises and move the hospital, the schools and the orphanage into the Settlement too, Beiliel evangelists and doctors were into the refugee camps and did a splendid work of preaching and healing among the miscrable people

The programme of the Worldwide Evangelistic Band included a Short Term Bible School in February. This now seemed to be out of the question. But eight delegates from Manchutia had already arrived and Dr. Sing was determined that they should not be disappointed. With fighting continuing all around, he and the other members of the Band held daily classes and took the students through twenty-three books of the Bible! Some of those attending were recent converts and they returned to commence work for God in their own homes.

A six months' itinerary through South China lay ahead of them, beginning in March, but even so there could be no relaxation for Dr. Sung. Just before the fighting broke ont, he had assumed responsibility as chief editor of The Guide to Holiness, the Bethel magazine. In view of the long absence from Shaughai in prospect, he had recruited the entire Bethel staff to prepare material for the magazine for six months ahead. When was broke out with the complete disruption of the work of Bethel, it would have been impossible to continue the regular publication of the magazine had not this provision already been made. As it was, the magazine was able to continue publication all through the enstring months. And, incidentally, the Band had brought back from Manchuria 800 new paid subscriptions l

With great difficulty, steamer passages to Hong Kong were secured for the Band at the beginning of March, When the vessel reached Hong Kong on Friday, March 4th, it was placed in quarantine for smallpox! A crowd of Christians from the Peniel Mission waited on the quay to welcome them—but in vain. On Saturday afternoon they hired a launch to go out to the ship at its quarantine station. Songs and shouts of joy were exchanged, but it was Studdy, March ofth, before the Band could land. They proceeded straight to the evening service, at which nearly 1,000 people were waiting, crowded into a chapel built to seat only 500.

Dt. Sung preached that first might after a bright musical introduction. In this British colony, Faglish was well understood, so he preached in English while Philip Lee interpreted into Cantonese. For two hours the burning words pointed out—preachet and interpreter speaking in rapid succession. Thereafter, three services were held daily, none of them less than two hours in diration, and the meetings went on fin six days. Dr. Sung and Andrew Gih shated the preaching. Sickness and loss of voice sometimes threatened to cripple their ministry, but God took them right through to the end. Rich and poor, high and low, dwellers in mansions and house-boats, educated and illiterate, those diessed in silk and those in rags, members of all denominations met in the Petitel Mission Church. Some came over the ferry from Hong Kong and some even came from Cheung Chau Idland, an hour's journey away by launch.

There were many ourstanding conversions and a miniber of the leading men in the Hong Kong and Kowloon churches trace their spiritual awakening and conversion to the ministry of Dr. Sung. One whose life was deeply influenced by him is an independent evangelist who has represently visited every part of Hong Kong and Kowloon preaching the Gospel—including all the refugee and squatters huts—and he has led many to the Lord.

It was at Kowloon that the Band as such held their first meeting to pray for the sick. During the meetings some of the Band had been raited up from attacks of malaria and other complaints in answer to prayer. Now people came with their sicknesses to ask for prayer. "What could we do?" they said. "We said to one another, 'What would Jesus do if He were here?' "About fifty people, therefore, were invited to attend a special meeting. Dr. Sung preached to them mging them to confess their sins, pray to Jesus and extreise faith. Ever yone confessed their sins. Then Dr. Sung and Andrew Gh laid hands on them one by one and prayed for them. At a praise meeting the same evening many, including missionaries, restified to having been healed of varying com-

On March tath the Band crossed to the Chinese maniland for meetings in the large and palatial Union Church. For the first two days the church was only partly full and they were driven to prayer, God heard and the evening services were soon being attended by big crowds. Amidst the formalism, the wealth and the wouldlines of the Hong Koug church file they preached Jesus and His Cross. The Holy Spirit again worked powerfully and the after services were crowded with people seeking Christ. Towards the end, the whole andirorium became a "Counselling Room". Dr. Sung's messages were particularly full of power, Restitution and confession resulted and missionaries were moved as well as the Chinese Christians.

One praying mother had an atheis son who had been to America three times in the course of his education. This man hard his mother for praying for him and had even contemplated mindering her. When he was invited to the meetings by a friend he consented to go, "just to see that madman Sing jumping around the platform"! But he came under deep conviction of sin and kinds where he was to make his confession to God. Then he went over to the side of the church, where the women, in Chinese tradition, were segregated, and sought our his mother. With a trembling voice he asked her forgiveness and she sobbed aloud as she praised God for answering her prayers of long years.

From Canton the Band travelled up the Pearl River to Wuthow in the province of Kwangsi where both the city churches had only small congregations. The Christian and Miwionary Alliance also had a Bible School. One of the students there, Mr. Newman Shih, had been deeply blessed through the ministry of the Band in Shanghai in 1931 at the summer Bible Conference at Bethel. He had prepared the other students to expect something really great. But after the first meeting on March 27th they were so disappointed that Mr. Shih came in for a good deal of criticism, The second day, however, the power of Goil rested on Dr. Sing as he preached and there was a deep searching work of the Holy Spirit in all hearts. Neither students nor faculty could resist the Spirit. The Principal was the first ro go to the front, and he was followed by the whole student body and many of the chuich members. They all knelt in the presence of the Loid and confessed their sins with teats. Throughout the whole ten days there was a continuous and deepening work of God's Spirit. Whole nights were spent in prayer and the blessing overflowed to the whole city and district. One wonnan was convicted of the theft of a gold bracelet over twenty years before. Its current value was about $300, and she now gave it to the Bond.

The night before leaving Wuchow. John Sung found himself singing in his sleep, "Without Me, without Me, without Me we can do nothing. Cast forth, cast forth, cast forth as a branch and burned. Without the ye can do nothing." He awoke wreping. Strangely enough, the Chinese character for Wil of Wuchow suggests a Cross and a Self. And in this John saw a warning that unless he daily yielded the old Self to the Cross, he coo would be cast forth as a branch and be burned. A single theme was constantly in lus mind at this time: "Though I have (this, that and the other) and have not love, I am nothing."

At Kweihsien, two lady missionaties were in charge of a school for blind girls. The church was very small. The ladies spared nothing in their love for the girls but few of them had been converted; they were still without God and without hope. As the meetings went on, others were blessed but there was no move among the girls. They seemed as cold and as hard as stone. John Sung was deeply concerned and longed for them to know the love and the care of a Heavenly Father. As he pleaded with them one day, the break came. Their hearts were melted by the love of God and drey gladly received the Savour.

When invitations came to the Band from Naming and Yulin, lots were again cast and Sung. Lee and Nieh were directed to Yulin. The church there was supposed to be a flourishing one, but the educational standard of the members was so low that John had great difficulty in preaching to them. Add to this a lack of oneness of heart among the three team members and an unsympathetic interpreter and the result was no blessing. "... If I have not love, I am nothing."

The Band now returned to Canton for meetings in the Baptist Church, led by Andrew Gih, who later went on to Swatow. The rest of the Band returned to Hong Kong on April 26th for a second enthusiastic campaign, which continued until May 1st. On that day a very large crowd attended the Periel Mission Church for a baptismal service, in which Dt. Sung had been invited to take park.

"But I have never been haptized by immersion myself!" he objected. Then he added that if Mr. Reiton would haptize hun first, he would baptize the others. So the Rev. A. K. Reiton first immersed Dr. Song, and then Dr. Song in turn haptized twenty-one women and twelve men. Did such an event have any

On May 2nd the Band began a simultaneous campaign at both the Methodist Church (in the morning) and the Hop Yat Tong (Love Church) in the evening—both churches on the island of Hong Kong. Dr. Sung preached powerfully to large crowds for a week, the other members of the Band leading the singing and Jealing with the enquirers: Andrew Gih used to conduct the prayer meetings. May 8th was Studay and their last day. Dr. Sung preached at the Peniel Mission church in Kowloon the morning and at Hop Yat Tong on the island in the evening—a great day concluding a remarkable campaign.

In Jime, the Band travelled up the coast to the province of Fulcien. Dr. Sung and Frank Ling remained in Foochow while Andrew Gib, Philip Lee and Lincoln Nich travelled over the road so familiar to John Sung and his fasher to Hinghwa. They travelled partly by sedan chair, partly by rickshaw and partly by river launch and all through tourential tan. John had elected not to go with them to his old home town for he said, "No prophet is accepted in his own country and with his own people!" Both at Hinghwa and at Sienyu there was the kind of divine work which breaks down barriers and sweeps away personal emnities, bringing Christians together in a grand unity of thought and purpose. The favourite chorus was "The Blood shall never lose its power". The Rev. W. B. Cole wrote of great victories won and sentirely new spirit introduced into the church, the Bible School and the church high schools. People who had long been estranged from each other became reconciled and there was a revived spirit of witness and prayer.

Meanwhile, in Foodhow John Sung and Frank Ling experienced a time of marvellous blessing, perhaps greater than anything witnessed hitherto. At first there were no great crowds and it was examination time for the schools. But Dr. Sung's reputation spread fast. Many young people from the mission schools and from many Government schools as well began to attend the meeting. They used to stay in the church from ten in the morning right on until after the three o'clock meeting. They were afraid to go away for lunch lest they lose their seats! Four hundred university students were once among the congregation. Dr. Sring pouced out his heart and soul day after day in delivering God's Word. The break came in the second week when hundreds of people were born again, confessing their sins to God. Students made restitution to their teachers, reconciliations were a daily occurrence and joy overflowed into the streets as the students returned home in groups singing. Twenty-seven consecutive days of incessant rain and deliberate attempts by their school-teachers to prevent the boys and girls from attending could not keep people away from the meetings. The young people worked through the night at their lessons so as to be able to attend the incctings by day. Dr. Sung depended on Frank Ling for interpictation, and even the death of Frank's little daughter was not allowed to interfere with the meetings. Frank went straight from the graveside to the platform. Towards the end of the time in Foochow, Dr. Sung received threatening letters to the effect: "Leave Foochow or we will put you in gool?" The walls of the city were plastered with anti-Sung slogans! The daily newspapers attacked him. But during the month, over 1,000 young people were won for Christ, many of them formerly following a materialist philosophy and being open enemies of Christianity. One hundred and twenty-seven of them paid their own way to Sbanghai to attend the Bible Conference at Bethel in July.

The 1932 Bible Conference at Bethel was the fifth such conference and lasted from July 4th to 14th. War conditions, interrupted communications and overcrowded transport did not deter the crowds from all over China from making the journey to Shanghai. A large proposition came from South China—Foochow, Swatow and Hong Kong, Bethel was hard put to it to secure accommodation for every one. Fifteen hundred people crowded the auditorium every day from morning to night. The interest and the blessing was so great that John Sung and Andrew Gih attanged a three weeks' Short Term Bible School for any delegates who could stay and pay their own expenses. One lumdred and twenty students enrolled, and in spite of the great summer heat three hours were spent in Bible study in the early mornings, evangelistic meetings were held every afternoon and in the evenings there were further studies in the Old Testament. In this way sixteen books of the Bible were covered.

Since the last Conference in July, 1931, when Dr. Sung had made his first appearance, the Worldwide Evangelistic Band had travelled a total of 54,823 miles, holding 1,799 meetings! They had preached to over 400,000 people in thirteen provinces and over 18,000 decisions had been registered! They had ministered to churches connected with fluiteen missionary societies, and had left behind them an organization to ensure the proper "follow up" of all the converts.

After the Conference and the Short Term Bible School, John Sung, with Philip Lee and Lincoln Niels, returned to Kwangtung for a Bapust Summer Conference in Swatow during the latter part of Angust and early September. Owing to some objection to the practice of twiting recople to the front of the church at a sign of decision, this was dropped. In the place of this, a prayer meeting was arranged every afternoon for those seeking Christ. Before long about 80 per cent, of the evening congregation were attending the prayer meeting. There was no preaching. People were neeting with God and dealing with their sins in His presence. Those were exhausting bin deeply sausfying weeks of toil

CHAPTER, THIRTEEN

With Bethel in North China

"I If E crowning revival is on, All books sold out. Send more quickly." This was the cable received in Shanghai from Peking in October. In Peking, of all places, the Band might have expected a gool reception, for was not this the educational capital of China and the cultural heart of the nation? Only recently it had been a hot-had of anti-Christiatt sentiment. Yet there the evangelists witnessed the same mighty moving of the Spirit in the hearts of nich.

Dt. Sung travelled by way of Hankow, where he spoke once while the rest of the Band went by the Tsinpu rome, calling at Kaifeng, Loyang and Tsinan on the way. They all met in Peking 10wards the end of October, 1932. The anti-Christian movement had largely spem its force and the nation's hate was diverted to the Japanese aggressors. The Five-Year Movement of the Church had been launched as early as 1929 with its prayer twatchword, "O Lord, revive Thy Chinich, beginning with me!" Revival movements were now the order of the day, specially in North China. Shantung was winnessing many strange things. There were groups which emphasized repentance from sin and forgiveness through the Cross, but there were others which spoke little of sin and redemption and stressed only certain mystical and emotional experences supposed to accompany the gift of the Holy Spirit. These movements were featured by a variety of psychical phenomena. It was in Shantung that the "Jesus Family" originated, This movement was among the most extreme in its un-Scriptmal emphasis, though its followers set a high example of zeal and self-sactifice as diry set out to preach the Gospel and to found communal colonies or "families" all over China. And it was in Shanting that the "Spiritual Gifts Society" had the tuost adherents.

The Bethel Bands went wherever they were welcomed, but avoided all extremes. And the revival which so often accompanied their work was of a headthy character. Their teaching was a contective to the errors of the "Jesus Family", the "Spiritual Gifts Society", the "Time Jesus Church" and other enthusiastic but scripturally ignorant groups of Christiaus, Dr. Faul Abbott, Chairman of the Shantung Mission of the American Presbytetian Mission, had had good opportunity to assess the work of the Bethel Band in North China and he made these observations in the 1932 Year Book; "Their work impresses one as sane and constructive with emotion released in laughter and song, under control and with no excesses or results to undo or live down. Their follow-up work with correspondence, prayer lists and printed material is skilfully carried on as part of their service to the churches."

In coming north, the Band left behind the green paddy fields of the south and exchanged them for the brown hills and ripened maize and millet fields which cover the northern plains. The mornings were already chilly, but the sun shining from cloudless skies shed a golden warmth over all throughout the middle of the day. As the train approached "the Ancient Capital", the party could see the azure-tiled roofs of the lovely Temple of Heaven immediately south of the city. From the station outside the massive Chien Men (South Gate), the travellers were taken by car through the ancient walls into the onter or Tartar city. The walls of the nuner or Imperial city had mostly disappeared to make way for modern building plans but, like the innermost box of a child's nest of boxes, the storied "Forbidden City" where generations of Chinese emperors had lived and died still wore an air of mystery and retained much of its former magnificence. The goldand green-glazed tiles of the palace roofs show with a brightness that was dazzling. All traffic is forced to detour around the walls of the "Forbidden Ciry" and, after passing the "Coal Hill" which guards the northern gate of the Palace, the members of the Band soon arrived at the American Presbyterian Mission compound, John was at last in the city where the Prking National University had once offered him the Chair of Chemistry in its medical college.

The Presbyterian church committee had not expected great crowds at the meetings and were tather surprised when, on the first day, there was a very good attendance. Each day began with a seven o'clock prayer meeting. Though the early mornings were cold and it was hardly light as the Christians met, there was nothing cold about the praying, whether by individuals or when all prayed in unison with a sound like waves breaking on a shingle beach, At 1en o'clock Dr. Sung conducted the Bible studies. His original expositions and lively presentation of truth soon increased the attendance from the initial handful to over 200, Andrew Gih preached at the big afternoon meeting and John Sung at the evening meeting, when the chapel was jammed with people, many standing omside the doors and windows to listen. As D1, Sung preached, the Holy Spirit convicted of sin and rightconsness and judgment. One night the Peking Chief of Police attended and the next night brought his whole family. All were clearly converted. The man himself confessed to the sin of nurder, having secured the death of a man in order to get his money. He had also obtained the lovely house in which he was living by illegal manipulation. Confession and restitution were followed by the joy of sus forgiven and the whole family started out on a new life in Christ. Another elderly official attended the meetings with his wife and a beautiful young concubine whom he had recently taken into the home. All three were converted and the bond between the husband and the girl was severed. An army officer confessed to receiving large bribes and even one of the Christian ministers confessed to the misappropriation of church funds. It was calculated that a total sum of over $20,000 (£1,250) in conscience money was returned, evidence of the fact that the preaching was both ethical and practical in its content. An old pastor said that he had seen nothing like it in the forty years he had been connected with the church. Rev. James P. Leynse of the American Presbyterian Mission wrote to the leaders of the Bethel Mission:

"Words fail me to tell you about the great crowning revival that has come to our station through the work of your Bethel Evangelistic Band. The Lord lins answered our prayers far beyond our expectations. . . . Confessions of sins, conversions and the uplift of many Christians were daily occurrences, . . . Never before have I incr a group of young men so completely devoted to their calling. . . . It was so strange to us reserved, formal Presbytecians to see the church members as one body break out into public prayer and praise. . . These men brought the saving knowledge of Jesus Chriet, vision and strength for daily tasks, victory in suffering and a passiou for souls. I am so thankful that our church realized in time the conditions to be observed before obtaining these great blessings—namely, continuance in prayer, in fellowship and in the truth of Christ's indwelling and a manifested longing to abandon ourselves to the will of our Lord. . . ."

Another missionary wrote: "Let me bear my own testimony to the glorious freedom which has come to me. I came out to China to lead Chinese friends to Christ, and instead they have opened up to me His fullness!"

The meetings in the Presbytterian church were followed by a mission in the Methodist church in the south city, just inside the Hata Men. Young people and employees from the schools, the hospitals and the theological seminary, with the outsiders who came in, filled every one of the 1,200 seats. Many of the young people were brought to real faith in Christ as Saviour during the meetings. Ten of the seminary students went to see Dr. Sung one day to tell bim that they had lost their faith since entering flue seminary. When Dr. Sung advised them to leave if this was the case, the principal went post-haste to see Dr. Sung, who told him quite bluntly: "If the students less their faith in Christ while in your seminary, you ough to feel that something is wrong!" Dr. Sung took an unfaitching, unfaltering stand in this centre of liberal Christianity in China in denomining all unfaithfulness to the Word of God, Neither fear of man or respect of persons were allowed to deter him.

On October 31st Dt. Sung commenced a third series of revival meetings in the Salvation Army auditorium, the largest in the city, The hall was packed every night and as the revival continued many found Christ. On November 6th the Band began their last campaign in the American Board Mission church, which seats 1,500 persons in addition to preaching at least twice every down 1,000 persons in addition to preaching at least twice every down 1,000 persons in addition to preaching at least twice every down 1,000 persons in addition to preaching at least twice every down 1,000 persons in addition to preaching at least twice every down 1,000 persons in addition to preaching at least twice every down 1,000 persons in addition to preaching at least twice every down 1,000 persons in addition to preaching a familiar sight all over the city.

But such a moving of God's Spirit was not left unchallenged by the Enemy. One of the church elders had formerly been connected with a flood tehef organization and had misapproprinted $50,000. When convicted of this sin, he had been un-willing to "open the coffn", and even suspected that Dr. Sung was directing his attacks at him personally, whereas, of course, John knew nothing of the man's past. This man, in his rage, took 200 students to the church one night determined to break up the meeting. The prearranged time was 7.30 p.m. John was preaching that night on Paul and Silas in prison and the chocus for the evening was "He can break every fetter!" The elder and his gang were wairing outside the church when at seven o'clock who should come along but the gaurison commander of the city with his escort! The attempt at a disturbance would have to be made another night! The designs of the elder became known and Dr. Sung had to be escorted to and from each meeting by hundreds of Christians. The elder was frustrated in fulfilling his evil intentions.

In the Presbyterian girls' high school there was an exceptional movement of the Spirit. The school authorities could not go all the way with Dr. Simg, but recognized that he was an instrument being used of God. Miss Bowden Smith, one of the traching staff, asked Dr. Sung after a semion on Naaman the Syrian why he had found it necessary to jump off the platform seven times by way of illustration! "Because", he replied, "people need to be impressed with exactly what the Bible says about dipping in Jordan seven times. Patience and perseverance need to be ruphasized as well as strict obedience." There was no doubt about the effect of such preaching on the girls. Over ten of them registered their names to go to Shanghai to attend the Hethel Bible School and prepare themselves for the Lord's service, Many began at once to witness and organized themselves into witness bands.

In assessing the results of Dr. Sung's visit to Peking, the Rev. C. Stanley Smith of the American Presbyterian Mission declared that he had "exerted a very great influence in Peking". So great, indeed, was his influence that pressure was brought to bear on him to remain in Peking in a permanent pastotate. This, however, was a suggestion that had no attraction for a man with a vision that took in the whole of China.

From Peking, the rest of the Band went on a first visit to the mountainous province of Shansi, where they were greatly used to stir up the chutches—and the missionaries too! But to De. Sung had come an invitation from the churches of Tientsin, who sent a representative to urge him to go. After prayer, it seemed right to respond to this call. The inter-church committee arranged meetings in the large Methodist church to last ten days. It was said that there never had been revival meetings in that church before and that people had never been invited to kneel down to pray! Many of the church members at first objected to Dr. Sung's methods, but as the meetings went on the Spirit of God broke through the opposition, and some of those who had been critical personally visited Dr. Sung in his rooms at the Y.M.C.A. to pray with him. There was, for example, a well-known lady, a returned student from America, who became like a little child in her humility and simplicity of faith. Another lady, on the other hand, who was the concubine of an opium-smoking Army officer wanted to believe, him was unwilling to give up her liaison. She persistently resisted the Holy Spirit's conviction and finally went out of her mind. A warning to unrepentant sinners!

Among the nominal Christians who attended the meetings was a man by the name of Meng Chao-ran, an utterly worldly character taken up with gambling, drinking and pleasure. He was convicted, converted and consocrated to God's service all in a few days. Subsequently he became the travelling secretary of the North-west Church Association and exercised a wide and fruitful ministry in the provinces of Kansu and Chinghai.

After the first mission was over, there came an ungent invitation from some young people to hold meetings in the south suburb Methodist church. The meetings were held, though in opposition to the wishes of the church pastor. But after eight days' meetings all opposition had been swept away and a number of wealthy families were won for Christ and have continued ever since to be loyal supporters of the church. It is no wonder that hete too the Devil did his utmost to wreck the work. On the last day a madanan tried to make a mutderous attack on John Sung with a knife, but was forcibly prevented. It was in Tientsin that the strongest Preaching Band organization up to date was formed, and fifty small bands were left behind to witness for Christ throughout the city. Several hundred rejoicing believers saw John off on the train to Peking and one of them bought bins a first-class ticket. "This was the first time I had experienced such Juxury", he said, "but I did not teally enjoy it or feel comfortable!"

From Peking. John Sung went south on his way back to Shanghai. En more, he stopped off at the important railway junction town of Chengehov. As there were no churches large enough for a united mission, a tent was erected. The weather was bitterly cold and the wind howled atound the tent. Most of the people who came wete situple country people and poor children off the street. This was a great contrast to the meetings of Tientsin, but John was impressed with the necessity of training Christians in the cities to go out into the villages to evangelize The simple life of the villagrs, he reflected, would be a healthy change for them from the worldly life of the cities. Village people were, moreover, more hamble and would often quite spontaneously make public confession of their sins. Among the city Christians two preaches were revived, a Post Office official was saved and two young women dedicated their lives for full-time service.

On aerival back in Shanghai, John found that the others had not yet returned from their tour of Shansi. Some of the leaders at Bethel were inclined to be critical of John for keeping to the graines while the others went to the smaller and more out-of-the-way places. To this his answer was: "What attracted are about the big cities was not the comfort to be found there, but singers in large numbers. The cross we all had to bear was different in each case. Living conditions might be more rigorous in the country towns, but in the big city campaigns the strain on one's physical and nervous strength was greater, the work itself was harder, and the opposition greater. The sowing of the seed had to be watered by sweat and tears. There was no question of my choosing the more comfortable pathway?"

When the rest of the Band remrited, the whole group reached an understanding that they would not again divide up or allow differences of opinion to weaken their strength. In planning their future campaigns, they would seek a closer co-operation and the cleat leading of God.

The increasingly scrious political situation in relation to Japan had decided the Bethel Band leaders to move the Bible School and Nursing School to Hongkong, while the ophanage work was to be moved to Taming in North China. While the Band waited for the start of their next itinerary, John gave himself to editorial work on the Bethel magazine.

Early in 1933, the five men set our again for Shanning. The work being shared with the other four, Dr. Sung, to his great dissatisfaction, had less speaking to do. He was much happie when he was working to the full limit of his time and sit ength and he found his reduced preaching schedule not at all to his liking. At Tsinan, where John was paying his third visit, he concentrated chiefly on the Cheloo University students. The provincial Commissioner of Finance was then Mr. Ernest Yin, who, with his wife, was already a Christian. Now he had the joy of seeing his children find Christ. Mr. and Mrs. Yin went on to exercise an increasingly strong Christian influence in Government and educational circles. Weihsien and Tsining were the next places visited. At Tsining some of the leaders were revived and the Governor of the Prison took Dr. Sung to preach to the prisoners. Meetings followed at Hwatghsten and at Tengehow, where an unhappy state of friction and miunderstanding between the missionaries and the Chinese pastor was brought to an end. Chefoo, the lovely land-locked harbour and summer resort, was the next towat to be visited. An unusual feature of the Band's work there was the blessing which came to the China Inland Mission school for British and American children, mostly the children of missionaries. Many of them wrote letters to Andrew Gih after his visit to tell him how they had accepted Christ or given their lives more wholly to Him. From Chefoo, members of the Band went on to Kaomi and Kiaochow, and everywhere the preaching of the Gospel in its simplicity, but with a freshness that was unknown to many, achieved extraordinary results. This is what Dr. Paul Abbot reported of the work of the Bethel Band in Shantung;

"Bloodthirsty baudits, rapacious officials, overbraining soldiers, anatchistic students, dishonest servants, polygamists, serlare scholars, business-men, rickshaw coolies, beggars, men and women, young and old, city-twellers and country folks, write moved to confess and foesake sin and to make reparation and restitution." An impressive list indeed!

Oue illitreate woman, the wife of a wealthy business-man, found Christ during the meetings in Weishien. Later the family moved to the north-west of China. Not only did this woman become a soul-winner, but through her faith and prayers her daughter was saved and trained for Christian service, being closely associated with the Chinese missionary society known as the "Back to Jerusalem Band."

In March the Bond crossed over from Shantung into the province of Honan for meetings in Raifeng, the provincial capital. After a disappointing start among the schoolboys of the Baptist high school, there were eventually about fifty who came out for Christ. At Kihsien, innead of the several hundred high school children they had expected, there were only a lot of simple country women and farmers. To get his message across, John used one of his dramatized Bible stories. But they sull could not grasp what he was taying to teach, All they knew was that the thing to do was to "confess sin". They would go on confessing sin over and over again indefinitely! So when he could not bring them to an assirtance of foi giveness any other way, he offered to lay hands on them and pray for them, Immediately, they seemed to experience the joy of forgiveness and to have a more intelligent understanding of the preaching.

The Team was without Andrew Gih when they went back to Kaifeng for meetings in the Fece Methodist Church. This time they had the fullest possible co-operation and sympathy from the missionaries, among whom was the Rev. James Taylor, a grandson of Hudson Taylor, the founder of the China Inland Mission. One day there was a deep work of the Holy Spirit which led many to confess their faults one to another. Prayer and confession went on for about four hours. As on Mt. Carmel, the fire of the Lord fell and consumed the samifice, The 700 or 800 people present were caught up in a great song of praise and thanksgiving to God.

At Changteh, the missionaries were liberal in their theology and were opposed to the evangelical doctrine of the Blood of Christ and all that "out-of-date stuff". John was indeteried by this and as usual wielded the two-edged sword of the Spirit, preaching the great and essential truths of salvation. The whole congregation was so moved that they all began to cry to God, among them the pastor of the church, who acknowledged that he was not born again. After being truly converted, he determined that he would henceforth preach only the fundamental doctrines of the faith,

The Band continued its journey north through ripening harvest fields of wheat, along the Tsinpu line into Hopeh. Their next meetings took place in Shihkiachwang, the junction for the railway into Shansi. The meetings were held in the Assemblies of God Church, where the emphasis was principally on the speaking with tongues. But it soon became clear that many who claimed to have spoken with tongues had never really repented of rin. They too needed to confess and get right with God. What a sumer needs, John emphasized, is not the gift of tongues or any other such gift, but the gift of salvation. To seek the gifts without first dealing with sin is a dangetons thing, which all too often leads to the deceptions of the Devil! Some twenty missionaries from the surrounding cities attended these meetings and were themselves deeply moved. They went back to their work with a new zeal and a new faith in the power of the Word of God.

From Hopeh a narrow gauge railway winds its way through interesting mountain scenery up into Shansi, Taiyuan, the provincial capital, is the terminus of the line, and was the next destination of the Battd. The English Baptist Mission had all the usual mission institutions there—schools, hospital, orphanage and church, John was suffering from a bad cough and was kindly entertained in the doctor's home, where his cough was cated for. He was unwell and unable to give of his best to the work. On the whole, there was not a good reception for the message of the Band and there were only a few saved. The next Shausi city to be visited was Pingring, where, as in Taiyuan, the liberal element was strong. Following the dismissal of a pastor by the missionaries for misconduct, the atmosphere in the church was very unhappy. The Principal of the church school was also outspoken in his opposition to the Band and their message. In spite of his cough. Dr. Sing followed his usual line and powerfully inveighed against church leaders who were not faithful to their tasks. "Dry bones!..., Stones of stumbling!" he called them. But they were stung in their consciences and at last came to the place of confession of sin. The dismissed pastor confessed his coverousness and admitted that he had been just a professional preacher! With sin put away and the wrongs in the church put right, the storm in the Pingting church became a calm. The leaders were all revived and the future took on an entirely new complexion.

The church at Pingyao was the result of the faithful preaching of workers connected with the China Inland Mission. Although there was no modernism in the China Inland Mission field, Dr. Sang artibuted the noticeable lack of leadership to the absence of any extensive educational work in the area. This was the sphere of the labours of Pastot Hsi Sheng-no, to whose labours many of the churches owed their origin. The churches were small in numbers compared with the Horati and Shantung churches and they were certainly fai behind in education and culture compared with many which the Band had visited. These were mountain people and despite all their intellectual handraps they were honest, sincere believers and were to stand as firm as any Christians in China in the years of war and trial that lay ahead. They also gave a larger place to the time-honoured courtesies of the Chinese than these semi-Westernized young men from the coast, and consequently they found it hard to reconcile the manifest zeal of the preachers with what appeared to them as their uncought and unspiritual behaviour. No doubt this detracted from the effect of their message.

The final campaign before the Bethel Conference in Shanghai was at Hungtung, the administrative centre of the entire China Inland Mission field in Shansi. This area covered thirty-eight counties. The visit of Dr. Sung and his companions had been arranged to coincide with the biennial delegate conference, and there were many missionaries present too. Hungtung had both a high school and a Bible School, so that the audiences to hear the Bethel preachers were reasonably large, It was detided to devote the first three days of the conference entirely to revival meetings, and the last three days would be given to business. It was at this conference that the events recorded in the prologue took place. Those stirring days are a vivid memory still for all those who were present, Chinese and missionaries alike.

Very tired after their extensive travels, the Band travelled back to Shanghai for the Bethel Conference, The guest speakers were the Rev. Marcus Cheng and Dr. French Oliver. Dr. Oliver and Dr. Sung shared the morning meetings. Unfortunately the two men disagreed on whether or not Christians would pass through the Great TribuLation! And Dr. Sung was not one to let the matter lie! His platform polemics must have been embarrassing to the leaders of the Bethel Mission!

Dr. Sang records that the lessons he learned from the experiences of the last six months were the lessons of Mt. Carmel; the distinction between the true and the false, that which is of the flesh and that which is of the Spirit. The fire of the Spirit was not to be expected in response to the shouting and the noisy fienzy of the false prophets. It was the quiet confidence and faith of Elijah that brought the fine down. The solf life must be consumed before the cry, "The Lord, He is the God!" will be heard. Only the Spirit's fare can do away with the differences which divide Christians, melt their hearts and unite them in true has mony and followship.

CHAPTER FOURTEEN

Last Months with Bethel

MMEDIATELY after the 1933 Bethel Conference, Philip Lee, the musician of the Band, sailed for America to study music at the Moody Bible Institute. Lincoln Nich took up work at Bethel and the Band was reduced to three. John Sung and Andrem Gih now paid a lumited visit to Kwangtung for missions in several towns, before their next tom to the far north of China. The Bethel leaders at this time issued fresh instructions to the Band about the division of the work. There were also restrictions placed on Dr. Sung as editor of the Guide to Holiness, and it is clear that Dr. Sung's relations with the Bethel authorities were becoming incasy, John records in his diary that his only desire was to walk with the Lord by any way He should choose. But quite evidently serious difficulties lay ahead of him.

The present itinerary was to take the Band up to the border provinces which were once a part of Innet Mongolia. The ancient city of Kalgan is the capital of the province of Chahat, and is a modern city of 200,000 people with several churches in it, thought note of them large. Three thys' meetings were held in each of three churches; the Norwegian Mission church, the Salvation Army and the Methodist Protestant church. But there were few evidences of the Spirit's working. Even in this remote place they found that liberalism and modernism had supped the life and witness of the church. Social conditions and the general lawlessness and disrespect for human life greatly saddened the Band.

From Kalgan they proceeded by rail to Kweihwa in Suiynan, where a retreat for about 150 leaders from all the China Inland Mission stations and churches in the province had beet arranged. Those who attended had had to accustom themselves to working under the most difficult conditions. Banditry was rife and there were all kinds of discouragements to the world-be witness for Christ. But at the meetings there were many whose hearts the Lord touched and who sought Him for forgiveness and power in service. There was some friction, however, among the three Band members and this partially crippled their witness. John Sung was very sad at heart over the situation, but set himself to learn the lessons which spiritual defeat could teach. An investigation of the financial methods of a "Jesus Family" community in Kwellwa was a further warning to him of the dangers that exist where the financial aspect of the Lord's work is given madue prominence. It is then that division all too easily occurs.

Paotowchen is the terminus of the Inne from Peking to the Inner Mongolian border and in this city another 100 or 200 Christians connected with the China Inland Mission (Swedish Alliance Mission) gathered to hear the Bethel preachers. Among some of the casual members of the andience were two women who had fallen on hard times and desperately needed comfort. One of them had been deceived into marrying a man who runned out to be an opium-smoker and to have one wife already. Broken-hearted, this woman had herself taken to opium smoking, dunking, gambling and theatre-going. Finding no comfort in any of these things she was contemplating suicide when she heard about the meetings and went along to hear. Gladly she responded and accepted the Saviour.

From Paotow, the Band went on to Saratsi, where there was a large or phanage for girls conducted by the China Inland Mission (Swedish Alliance Mission). The Mongolian border is nototious for the number of baby guls who are thrown out to die or are killed ar birth and then thrown away. To save such children the orphanage existed. But few of them, it seemed, grew up as Christians, and most of them were matried into heathen homes. There were alrogether 500 or 600 people present at the meetings, a large proportion of them from the orphanage, and many of the orphana cause to a clear experience of salvation.

The three evangelists were taken on carnel back to visit the nearby cemetery, where the missionary victims of the Boxer Rebellion were buried. They pansed to remember those who had gone before and sown the seed of a harvest which others, themselves included, were now reaping.

The Band travelled back to Paoting by way of Peking, for another conference. Great crowds attended the four daily meetings. There were so many who wanted private interviews that Andrew Gib and John Sung took it in turns to be at their disposal. Scores were fired with an enthusiasm and given a boldness in testimony that had been unknown before. One of the inissionaties described the conference as the most wonderful thing that ever happened to Paoting. "Fveryone", she wrote, "loves the Bethel Band more than ever, with the exception of a few dry sticks who haven't caught fice yet!"

Travelling on south through Honan, the Band paid a return visit to Changteh. This time, instead of just 200 or so people, there were over 1,000, and there was much fruit from the proclamation of the same old truths. The converted pastor had been making green wrides and the whole situation in the church had been completely changed since the Bethel Band had first visited the city. What the lifeless intellectualism of liberal theologians will never accomplish, the faithful presentation of the Gospel in its simplicity and its clarity had accomplished in a few short months.

By the end of the year, the Band had visited thirty-three cities in six months and had held 866 meetings at which over 14,000 people had made profession of salvation or of dedication of life to God's service; 720 preaching bands had been formed and nearly 3,000 young people had volunteered for whole-time service during this same period.

The rhree men next went south to the Himan capital city of Changsha. A German missionary of the Liebentzell Mission, an associate of the C.L.M., well remembers her reception by Dr. Eitel of the Hindson Taylor Memorial Hospital as she arrived in the city after a very arduous journey from Shanghai: "Leave your ittings and jump into the rickshaw! The meeting is due to begin and we won't get a scat if we are late!"

So instead of a restful welcome and a quiet cup of tea, she found herself on the way to a tevival meeting while her companion hastily explained that the whole city was asrir as the result of the visit of the Bethel Band. The doctor and the other missionaries were obviously excited and full of joy at what was happening.

Hunan was the last province to open its doors to the messengers in Gospel, Until recent times it had been notonously anti-Christian. Changsha is the city where Hudson Taylor, the great pioneer missionary of inland China, died and where a hospital was erected in his normory. There was also a large Bible Institute affiliated with the Bible Institute of Los Angeles, and there were important Government and missionary educational institutions in the city. This was the place which the fittee Bethel Band evangelists had now taken by storm.

The sermon to which the newly arrived missionary found herself listening was on the Prodigal Son, and she had never heard the like before. All around her were sitting gentry, soldiers, peasants, old women, inmates of the Blind School, missionaries, Christians of many years standing and many a non-Christian attracted by the excitement. John Sing was preaching and Frank Ling was interpreting. With perspiration pouring down their faces and dashing off glass after glass of water, the story was acted one with the usual dianus and pathos and with plenty of local colour. At intervals in the sermion the chorus "Come home! Come home!" was sung. At the conclusion, in that formuly anti-Christian stronghold, there was an amazing response to the invitation to come forward to accept Christ. Women who, at the outset, had looked stupid and wooden as if nothing could penetrate their dark minds were among them. The Spirit of God had shined into their hearts and they were awakened souls. Those were glorious days. All three missions in the city had combined to sponsor the meetings and all shared in the joy of harvest. Not many years later Changsha became the cockpit of waning armies —Chinese and Japanese—and was partially put to the flames. It became a city of hortor and bloodshed. But Changsha had had its day of visitation.

Changsha is also a place of tragedy as far as the Bethel Worldwide Evangelistic Band was concerned, for it was there that this instrument forged for the Lord's service, this hand of flaming evangelists was finally broken. On the journey to Changsha, Andrew Gih had conveyed the growing dissatisfaction of the Bethel leaders with John Sung's contribution; be did not reach the eradication of sin, he attracted converts to himself, and so his work would not last, and there was a persistent suspiciou that he was receiving money gifts privately instead of passing them on to the Mission. John denied the last accusation; he was prepared to let time refute the second criticism and he did not believe in the doctrine of eradication; he preached the work of the Holy Spirit in mortifying the deeds of the flesh.

In Changsha, the Band were guests of the Rev. Marcus Cheng who was on the faculty of the Changsha Bible Institute. Little did any of them know that this was to be their last campaign as a Band, Andrew Gib and John Sung shared the four meetings as usual, John taking the Bible studies and the evening revival meetings. The Presbyterian Mission, which had not at first been too cordial to Dr. Sung, later travited him to speak five times to gatherings of students numbering about 1,000. There were over 300 decisions for Christ the first night. The attendance grew daily until the hall became too small, and the number of decisions increased with each meeting. There was great rejoicing over this signal answer to prayer for the young people of the city.

One day, as the trio were having a meal between the succtings with Dr. Ettel and other Chinese and unissionary friends, a telegram was handed to Andrew Gili from the Bethel Mission headquarters. In effect, the telegram spelled the dissolution of the Worldwide Band. It contained a summons to Andrew Gih to return to Shanghai for the purpose of organizing two new Bands for work in the provinces of Kwangtung and Kwangsi. Andrew Gili was placed in a great dilemma. He had to choose between his loyalty to Bethel and his pledge to John Sung to work in un-divided partnership with him. He felt obliged to comply with the instructions from Bethel and the die was cast, Somowfully, John and Frank saw Andrew off at the station. John Sung and Andrew Gih rarely met again!

When the meetings at Changsha had finished John 5mg and Frank Ling went on to Changteli in the same province. The Canadian Holmess Mission chapel was small and the people attending the meetings were few. There were other churches and missions in the city, but co-operation was lacking. John comments in his journals that the existence of numerous denominations of foreign origin is one of the greatest hindrances to the spread of the gospel in China.

Pressure was now being placed on Frank Ling to return to Shanghai to join the newly organized Band, but he felt it his duty to complete the present itinerary with Dr. Sung. They returned to Changsha en route to Hengyang, and spent a day or two with the Rev. Marcus Cheng. There John himself received a letter asking him to return to Shanghai to make other arrangements for his family, who were living at Bethel. But both he and Frank decided to proceed with the Hengyang programme. An amusing thing happened to them there. They sent a telegram announcing the time of their arrival, signing it, "Sung, Ling." So they were very surpused to find no one to meet them at the train. They discovered the explanation later. Two other increeognized Christians had come in from a neighbouring city and were seen to be carrying baggage. So the reception committee accosted them, enquired their names and, when they found their names were Sung and Ling, gave them a hearty welcome! Meanwhile, the real guesis of honour were finding their own way to the church alone!

In Hengyang the three churches combined to arrange the special meetings. The following is the account of the campaign written by the Rev. J. R. Wilson of the Church Missionary Society immediately after the meetings:

"Have you ever longed to meet a personality full of the glory of the Gospel who could present the message with a zeal and enthusiasm equal to his theme, a Pauline personality? . . . The Chinese can be painfully matter-of-fact, and their services are often dull and imemotional. . . . Ever since coming to China ewenty years ago, I have longed for someone to come and do what I cannot do-that is, to live and speak the glory of the Gospel. Then suddenly a living flame of Gospel zeal leapt upon

There had been some disappointment when the churches in Hengyang learned that Audiew Gih would not be coming as leader of the Bethel Band after all, because Dr. Sung, upon whom the burden of preaching would now fall, was reported to be a ensarionalist and some feared that the mission would prove a failure. But Mr. Wilson's report continues:

"Dr. Sung brought us a great gale of reviving power from God Hunself. . . . The Chinese confessed readily that this was no other than the boundless energy of the Spirit of God. For a whole week, twice a day, for two or more hours at each meeting, he poured out a living stream of searching Bible teaching, agonized prayer and cestatic praise, all intensified by vivid acting, scathing sai casm and exuberant humom. His physical antics were astonishing. He leaps about the platform, he dashed off point after point on the blackboard, he made lessons stand out vividly with lightning sketches in chalk, he acted humorously, grotesquely even, to make a story live, he prayed with a fervour that seemed to pour out life itself and then, as a climax, when his message had been delivered, he would be transported with joy and glory for a full half-hour, while he carried us along on wave after wave of devotion and praise, It was a tevelation! It was marvellously inspiring! The exceeding weight of glory found expression in a fellow human being, and it could not be denied.

"What was there in him to bring us lasting good? First be made Scripture live. Who can longer his rendering of Ezek. xxxvii? He held two dry bones in his hands. In mock show, he struck them one against the other like two dead church members engaged in a quarrel, 'Can dead bones hear the Word of the Lord?' he shonted. 'Praise God, they can?' There's hope for a dead church when the true Word of God is preached. Secondly, backsliders were searched as by a consuming fire. The man who fell among thieves was presented as a type of the church member who has been robbed by the Devil of faith, prayer, Scripruse and left half-dead. Why does the Devil leave him half-dead and not finish him off? Because churches full of robbed and half-dead Christians will help the Devil's cause more than anything else. Live Christians must do the work of rescuing and restoring to the half-dead their treasures of faith, prayer and Scripture. Thirdly be led us to enrhusiastic determination to follow Christ to the intermost. We had a great morning when he led us up the Hill of the Beatitudes. Step by step each Deatitude was taken to represent steps in our Loid's life; from the Incurnation to Calvary. . . . At each step as we thrubed high and higher came the ringing call, 'Forward march!' and a stirring chorus. And so we struggled on to the summit 'persecuted for righteousness sake!' Suddenly we were startled by the Cross being planted on the final blackboard peak. Could we follow all the way to Calvary? . . . 'Oh, Jesus, make us all willing to follow Thee all the way!' "

These words were written with the effects of the campaign vividly fresh in the memory. But twenty years later Mr. Wilson recollects those days in these words: "Such was the power of the presentation of the messages, that many of them are still vivid in my memory. Even the choruses are there in my mind all complete, indelible! . . . Another outstanding memory was the afternoon when Dr. Sung invited anyone who wished to unburden their hearts to meet him privately. At the special request of my three Chinese colleagues, I went with them. After hearing their stories, very sad in places, and recording names and details in an enormous notebook, Dr. Sung gave the rest of the time to prayer. With tears streaming down his face, he agonized in prayer for us that we might be victorious over sin by the power of the Cross of Christ and the work of the Holy Spirit,"

From Hongyang, where God was doing such great things, John, with a heavy heart, wrote letters to his friends in all the churches he visited announcing the end of his association with Bethel. Henceforth he would be working independently. But he had no plans. The future was blank. He did not even know where he was to find a place for his family. His journal records: "I cried to the Lord for strength to go on preaching the Gospel with all my might without any anxieties for other things." John, with his constant companion and faithful and expert interpreter, Frank Ling, returned to Shanghai, where he took his farewell from Bethel feeling like Abraham as he went out not knowing whither he went.

So ended an uneasy association with the Bethel Mission, U11doubtedly after the three years of lonely and uphill toil in his own province, John Sung had seen the full fruition of his gifts and powers in this close fellowship for three years with Andrew Gill and his other colleagues. He had learned much from Andrew Gih. Even his theology had needed some straightening out at some points! The two men had been a powerful combination and their parting was as sad as the parting of Paul and Barnabas, and its effect just as incalculable.

Dr. Mary Stone, the Chinese Director of the Bethel Mission, writes: "He was a wonderful man of God and a great blessing to many." Miss Betty Hu, writing from the present Bethel Headquatters in Pasadena, California, says of Dr. Sung: "I have never known anyone so powerful in his evangelism and yet so peculiar in his private life. He did the work of hundreds of preachers in those few short years." But his boundless energy and his very snecess had placed stresses and strains both on the other members of the Band and ou Snug himself. In particular, he could no longer tolerate being even partially under the direction of a foreigner . . . and a woman too! From now on John Sing was to be a free and independent evangelist.

CHAPTER FIFTEEN

A Voice Crying 1934-1935

Y 1934, John Sung had become a well-known national figure in the Christian would of China. He headed a list published by the Mariant China. published by the National Christian Council of six "notable personalities" among evangelical leaders. His contribution to the revival which was sweeping over large parts of China, especially the north and the south, was considerable. Thousands had heard the gospol from his lips, and as a result had experienced a thorough-going conversion of a spiritual quicketting.

Dr. Paul Abbott, writing in the 1932-1933 Christian Year Book, stated that "the work of these Bethel evangelists cannot be ignored in any estimate of present-day religious trends in Cluna". The Rev. Lautence D. M. Wedderbuth of the United Free Church of Scotland Mission, on returning to Manchinia from furlough, found an cathely different spirit in the churches. All services were crowded and there was "an entirely new interest in Christianity, both inside and outside the church", He attributed this largely to the work of Dr. Sung, "an evangelist of power and persuasion". Another missionary somewhat depreciatingly declared that in Harbin the church was "almost fanatically wedded to revivalism, following the visit of the Bethel Band, with Dr. Sung as the most effective preacher". Everywhere, the visits of the Bethel Band had left a tremendons keemiess for Bible study and a generally quickened life in the churches. It would indeed be hard to name a single province of north China where Dr. Sung and the Bethel Band had not left behind them a glorious record of spiritual blessing and lives cleansed and renewed and set on fire to serve God. During 1934, Old Pastor Sung, John's father, died. John was far from home at the time and somewhere off the China coast on a small staturer on the Lord's business. As his father, unknown to him, was dying at home, John seemed to see him in a dream, stunding by his side and saying to him:

"Siong-orh, I have gone to Heaven. But you have seven more years in which to work, So labour hard for the Lord!"

And labour hard he did. His reputation continued to spread iapidly and everywhere he went the crowds throughd to hear him—the homespun doctor of philosophy with his eccentric ways and unpredictable methods. People is mally arrived two or three hours before the meetings were due to begin in order to be sure of seats. Then they sat on after one meeting until the time for the next to be sure to be present.

The meetings always began with singing, Sing himself sometimes conducting the singing with a white handkerchief. Often the andienre would be asked to clap their hands to the time, Unison prayer followed. Then after a prayer by the preacher in a few brief sentences the semion began. As John walked to the rostium, he always had with him the precious book in which he had collected his daily joetings, though he seldom referred to it while preaching. On one occasion, while John was busy with a crowd of enquirers after the meeting, the book was forgotten and left lying on the pulpit. When he got back to his host's house he suddenly remembered it! Hungty as he was, he absolutely refused to sit down at table until the book was recovered. His companions waited and waited, singing hynnis at the piano to help them forget their hunger, and only when the book was found and safely delivered did they sit down to dinner.

Dr. Sung at first spoke poor Mandarin and his enunciation even of his own Hinghwa dialect was not very clear. His interpreters needed to be versatile and quick-witted men. Frank Ling was such a one. The neetings, though lively, were always under control. He never allowed anyone to disturb the meeting, whether by shooting out an exuberant "Hallelujah!" or by getting up to leave early. Any such disturbances met with a stern rebuke.

Sermons were illustrated in a variety of ways, Grotesque

blackboatd drawings and scribbled sermon outlines were commonplace. Sometimes members of the audience or of the Band were called on to the platform to help him act out an illustration. A missionary was once ordered to stand with his arms outstretched while Sung preached on being crucified with Christ! Men were frequently tied up with rope and then released to illustrate the power of sin and the deliverance Christ can give. In one mission station the missionary had beautifully decorated the platform with all her palms, ferns and pots of geraniums. Dr. Sung was emphasizing the uselessness of half-measures in dealing with sin when he noticed the plants. "No use just pruning sin and cutting it down a little! You must pull it up by the 100ts!" And, suiting the action to the word, he set to work to pull the plants up one by one, strewing them about the floor. There were no floral decorations on the platform the next day! A favorate illustration for the need to be filled with the Holy Spirit was to have a lighted rharcoal stove rarried on to the platform, Pieces of charcoaldirty and cold-were said to be like most church members. And a specially large piece was, of course, the pastor! What they all needed was to get into the fire to make them glow till they were red hot! And he seldom resisted the temptation to point out that it took much longer for the large and self-important pastor to catch fire than for the others! Legends about Dr. Suug multiplied and people never lacked for conversation when groups of Christians got together to discuss the great "ice-breaker", as he came to be known.

At the end of every service, the preacher would always give an opportunity for anyone seeking repentance or some other grace to come to the front for prayer. Tears flowed freely as spiritual conflicts were fought and won, sins confessed, apologies made or restitution promised. Sung himself, certainly during the years when he shared the work with his rolleagues in the Bethel Band, gave of his time and strength between the meetings to personal interviews, and there were numerous remarkable instances of divine blessing on his personal ministry; individuals were brought into the light and many a broken home reunited, John always recorded the names and addresses of such people and added them to his long prayer list. His extraordinary mind was able to memorize thousands of such names.

Not only were Chinese deeply affected, but many inissionaries experienced spiritual refreshing too. Some even attributed their real conversion to his ministry.

Soon after leaving Bethel, invitations began to reach John to speak at various Shanghai churches. The Foochow-speaking church was the first, and there he had a week's meetings at which sixty-three people found Christ. The name of the church was the Hall of Joy and Peace, and after his recent experiences John found comfort in the name! The next church to invite him was the Hall of Ahundant Virtue, and there there were over too conversions. Then the ministerial Forward Movement Committee arranged for three days' meetings for the whole of Shanghai in the Woods View Hall to coincide with the Spring Festival bolidays. Over 1,000 people attended the meetings. Finally, the Pirte Heart Hall invited him for a week's meetings and about 200 schoolchildren professed to believe. John took comage and looked forward to an even greater ministry than hitherto.

Several churches were competing to get Di. Sung to be their pastor, so he began to pray: "Lord, if you want me still to be an intereant evangelist, please open the door for campaigns in five provinces and send me $800 for my expenses within the next month?" As soon as news of Dr. Sung's new situation got abroad through the pages of Evangelism, Morning Star and other publications, invitations poured in. They came from the five provinces of Kiangsu, Clekiang, Anhwei, Hopeh and Shantung. And registered letters reached him from Changsha, Paoting, Peking, Shishitachwang, Paotow, Saratsi and other cities, with money gifts langing from $20 to $500, some of them from anonymous donors and others from people he did not know. The total exceeded the sum he had asked for I He was completely reassured. "I offered myself again to serve my faithful, mechangung Lord. Come wind, come weather, through cloud and sunshine, if God is with me, I ask for nothing else."

John's first mission on his own outside Shanghai was at Chinkiang, a city some distance up the Yangtze River from the coast. He divided his time there between three churches and many found Chitist, including some notable sinners. At Snehow South John spoke for the first time in Mandarin wilton an interpreter and was pleased to find that he was well understood. Cominning his journey, he paid his fourth visit to Tsinan, the Shantong capital, where business-men, Government officials, reembers of the medical profession and university students were among the great crowds which flocked to heat him preach.

Then there followed another tour of many Shantung cities, and it was Dr. Sung's aim to correct the thinking and the mroneous interprenations of Scripture which were causing such a chrotic state of affairs in so many of the churches. Everywhere he went he found great zeal, which he attempted to direct into Scriptural channels. Long-standing breaches between misionatics and channels. Long-standing breaches between misionatics and Chinese were repaired, very many young people were brought to Christ and given a vision of saving China with the Gospel, two paralytics were healed and one devil-possessed man was delivered. Rumours that Dr. Sung's doctrine had gone astray were confounded and wherever he went God confirmed His Word with signs following.

Meanwhile, the Christians of Tientsin heard that Dr. Sung was in Chefoo and sent an urgent invitation to him to revisit them. When all the Tientsin churches refused permission for the use of their buildings for special meetings, a large ancestral hall was hired, and there were two meetings a day, attended with remarkable blessing. Bur some of the prominent men in the churches started a campaign of vilification of Dr. Sung and opposed the work in every possible way. The inevitable consequences followed and over 300 Christians left the churches and began to worship God together in another place. A suggestion to build a new hall for the proclamation of the gospel was acclaimed, and after prayer for guidance a firnd was opened the very same day. Nearly $8,000 (£500) were subscribed on the spot. The sole motive in opening a new hall was to preserve liberty of worship and to proclaim the gospel. Dr. Sung therefore warned them against a sectation spirit and urged them to endeavour to preserve the unity of the Spirit. A committee was appointed and a year later the new hall was completed and dedicated to the Lord's service. The work was so prosperous and there were so many conversions that the original Preaching Band organization eventually became an independent church. This is the only case of a separate church group arising out of the work of Dr. Sung, and in this case it was not his original wish, but was forced upon the Christians by the attitude of the churches. The new church became by far the largest and the most active witness for Christ in the large city of

From Tientsin Dr. Sung paid a flying visit to Peking before travelling south again to the lovely lakeside city of Hangchow in the province of Chekinig. The church leaders united to welcome Dr. Sung, and ten days of meetings were arranged. There was another deep work of God, and many who had been just "church members" were been again and became real Christiaus. Fifty preaching bands were formed.

While in Hangchow, Dr. Sung heard that Dr. Sberwood Eddy was due to hold a meeting a little later. Believing him to be a liberal and to have departed from his earlier evangelical faith, Dr. Sing did not hesitate to denounce Dr. Eddy and did his utmost to persuade people to boycott the meetings which had been arranged.

Ten days' meetings followed in the Moore Memorial Church in Shanghai, when emphasis was laid on a close walk with God and a constant witness if backsliding was to be avoided. John was saddened by seeing some of the earlier converts going back. At Huchow, where Dr. Sung had first come toto the limitight after leaving his own province, he now demonstrated that it is not necessary to attract people to church with film shows and social activities of various kinds. The pastor was dubious whether there would be as many as 100 people to hear an evangelistic sermon! There were actually nearly 700, of whom many were saved and organized into fifty preaching bands.

Later John returned to Hangehow for a two weeks' convention at two churches. During this time Japanese planes machine-gunned the city, but the meetings went on, and in spite of much opposition there were many saved and stined up to serve God.

From Hangchow Dr. Sung went to Nanking, the national capital, which had hitherto been largely unaffected by revival movements. The meetings were held in the Quaker church and huge andiences crowded to hear him. The rank and file of the churches loved him, but the usual harsh criticisms of the leaders angered them and made it difficult for them to receive help from him. His testimony of retunctation also had an unmientional effect; some caroest schoolchildren were impressed with the idea that education had little value and that it was more urgent to preach than to study! This created some disciplinary troubles in some of the Christian schools! But a lasting work was done.

Hangchow was again visited for a Convention before John turned his steps once more toward his own native province and the commencement of an event wider ministry which was to reach out beyond the shores of the Chinese mainland. "The voice crying in the wilderness, 'Prepare ye the way of the Lord' " was the authentic voice of a prophet. Everywhere it awakened the response, "What shall we do then?"

CHAPTER SUXTEEN

Not Without Honour

HE province of Fukien had been enduring the miseries of civil war since the rebellion in 1933. With an improvement in the situation, invitations began to reach Dr. Sung to conduct campaigns in a number of the larger cities.

At Foothow, in September, 1934, there was another great campaign which hore comparison with the earlier trimmphant visit. Ninety-six new preaching bands were formed. After the campaign in the capital, John visited churches in the country districts around. Deaconess Loader and her colleague of the Church Missionary Society entertained him at Loyuan, where the Anghean church was used for four meetings daily, the first at 6.30 a.m. Much blessing resulted and the spiritual his of the village congregations was deepened. Backsliders were restored and preaching bands organized. "His teaching was good and Scriptural", says Miss Loader. "It think we were all made keener in witnessing and service for the Master."

From Foochow, Dr. Sing travelled south to Amoy, where several series of meetings had been arranged by the Five-Yea. Movement Committee of the Syned of the South Fukien church in Hweisin, Chuanchow, Changehow and Amoy. The meetings were well prepared for by prayer and there was an atmosphere of expectancy. Dr. Sung spent a week in each place from October 37th to November 17th, speaking three times a day wherever he went, the meetings seldom lasting less than three hours. In Amoy, the largest church in the city was filled to overflowing—doors, windows and a platform erected outside the church against the windows all heing filled. There was larrely soom for Dr. Sung and his interpreter to move Later, a special mat shed was put up to accommodate 2,500 people, and finally 5,000 people attended

a mass meeting on the football ground of the Anglo-Chinese College. A list of specific sins were faithfully dealt with. There were the usual strong deminications of the church leaders' lukewarmness, laziness, pride and lack of love. The highest level in his addresses was reached when the subject was I Cor. xiii—the love of God as seen in the Cross of Christ, Those who came under conviction and desired personal help were welcomed for private conversations and prayer from ien o'clock to noon daily. Thousands of letters were addressed to Dr. Sung telling of definite blessing received. "He worked extraordinarily hard , , , he gave himself passionately and wholeheartedly to his work during a month of extraordinary labour." So wrote the Rev. W. Short of the English Presbyterian Mission. For the now isual healing meeting, 2,000 admission tickets were distributed, and on this occasion too there was evident blessing. But it was in the spititual realin that results were most striking; many people were reached whom all previous efforts had failed to touch. There were wealthy sinners who attended every meeting, and one gambling house its Amoy fuled when it lost most of its habituds! One heavy gambler, a graduate of the Christian Anglo-Chinese College, was converted and saved $60 or $70 the following week! A leading business-man, previously utterly careless of spiritual things. became a Christian. Io the Theological College, students confessed their sins, old quarrels were forgotten and letters of apology written. Our student who had rhought that the more entry into a theological college would somehow make him a better man and who had on the contrary only grown worse, got right with God and, together with his room-mate was born again. The blessing spread to many a place unvisited by die evangelist as those helped in the meetings returned home to confess wrong-doing to others and to witness to new life in Christ. And the work went on. All the Amoy churches continued to be full and one of them doubled the size of its congregation. A week after D1. Song left at the request of the city authorities, who were perturbed at the interruption of communications by the crowds attending the meetings, 300 persons were turned away from the largest church in Kulangsu and an overflow meeting had to be arranged. In Amoy and Kulangsu 147 preaching bands were organized, and their first effort was a full day spent visiting all the villages on Amoy Island to preach the Gospel. This effort was followed by a day's report meeting and conference on evangelism.

There was room for some criticism that Dr. Sung overdid the denunciation of Christian leaders, built up his preaching band organization around his own appointed leaders without reference to his committee thus encouraging any separatest tendences there might be, and so stirred up the oou-rational curonous of the young people that many of therm, against the advice of friends and relations, followed their new bero round to other centres instead of returning to school. Yet the over-all pirture was one of abundantly answered prayer and a deep work of the Spirit of God.

ahundantly answered prayer and a deep work of the Spirit of God. From the English Pirsbyterian field Dr. Sing paid assected visit to the American Baprist field in the Swatow area of Kwangtung where he held a mission from January 23th to 31st, 1935. Again he preached three times a day at Kityang, forty miles west of Swatow, the meetings lasting about two hours each time. The church was crowded to capacity with 1,000 to 1,200 city and country Christians who gave eager attention to Dr. Sung. Among the few papers which the Rey. Dr. E. H. Giedt was able to take with him when he left Swatow on the last day of 1952 after twenty-one mouths of solitary confinement in prison was a record of Dr. Sung's sermon topics during that week;

Already weary in body after successive strenuous campaigns and with a voice hoarse through constant use, Dr. Sung drove humself to earry on, Dr. Giedt comments: "Dr. Sung's preaching was, on the whole, wholesome and constructive; not sensational, but dramatic. His sertions were not so much in the nature of topical development as of a ruoning comment on longer passages of Scripture, with apt illustrations and applications, frequently acted out dramatically. . . . It wone out several interpreters, using about three during the week. The interpreters had to follow suit in every gestine he made and even in acting out scenes. As result, he always left a few disciples wherever he went. Afterwards they went out as free-lance evangelists to preach on their own, imitating Dr. Sing's every pose, especially that of putting one foot forward, with the heel resting on the floor and the sole of the shoe showing forward!"

The great son of Fukien was no longer a propher without honour in his own country and among his own people!

CHAPTER SEVENTEEN

The Lame Walk

RAYER for the sick has always been a natural part of the faith of Chinese Christians. Many a church has been founded on the basis of prayer heard and answered for the chronically ill, or people raised up from critical illnesses. God has answered prayer in so many thousands of cases that Christians in China expect miracles to happen and they undoubtedly do. It became natural, therefore, to expect that every man who evidently had power with God as a preacher should also have equal power with God in praying for the physically ill and incapacitated.

John Sung had vivid inemories of occasions during his childhood when God had heard importunate prayer for healing, both in the case of his mother and of his father. He had never doubted that prayer did avail for the body as well as the soul. And soon after his return from America and at the ourset of his public ministry in Fukien, the wife of the pastor of the church where he was ministering had a sudden heart attack and it seemed that she was on the point of death. Dr. Sung prayed in faith that she neight be healed and that God's Name might be glorified in consequence. But there was no change in the woman's condition and John Sung was assailed with doubts like those that had wrecked his faith in America. Was God indeed a living God? He knelt againt at the bedside and touching the woman felt that she was still living. And then be prayed: "O Lord, if Thou livest and dost still work, give me today a true sign of Thine existence by causing this all but dead body to live. My faith shall then never again falter]" Assured that his prayer was heard, he rose up, comforted the husband and told him not to buy a coffin. Then he went on with his ministry. At the same time he wrote to one of his fellow workers: "God has already answered our prayers." When he returned to the pastor's home in the evening, he found that this was indeed the case. The woman had recovered, God's Name was glorified and the faith of the intercessor firmly established.

During Dr. Sung's visit to Shantung after the Manchurian rampaign, he had been orged to pray for the sick for the first time, but special meetings for the purpose were not then a common practice of the Bethel Band. The next traceable mention of a healing meeting was at the Peniel Mission Church in Kowloon, Hong Kong, in 1932. After that, wherever Dr. Sung went, there was pressure on hun to pray for the sick. Eventually, without making any claim to a "gift of healing", he made it a practice to include a service of healing at the end of most of his campaigns, when he used the occasion to preach the gospel. Where there was both repentance from sin and a genuine faith in God's power to heal, there were often remarkable cases of healing. But there was also a large percentage of sufferers who derived no benefit at all, Frank Ling well remembers a girl of sixteen who had to be catried on to the platform to be prayed for, but after the peayer she stood up, gave a testimony and walked home. But he also remembers a crippled young man of thirty for whom Dr. Sung prayed carnestly for a full half-hom, even pulling at his legs with his "heheving hands", but without result. He had many such disappointments-complete failures in cases where there had been high expectations and great publicity.

Dr. Sung usually had one meeting in every campaign at which he would give an address on healing and the necessity for a succere repentance before inviting the sick to come forward. It was always made plain that it was only as people accepted Christ as Savioni from sin that they could expect to be healed. Patients had to hand in a record of their names and addresses and the nature of their disease on cards provided.

The subsequent procedure varied from place to place and from time to time. But always there was first much individual and unison praying, without disorder or undue excitement. Dr. Sung would then kneel on the platform facing the audience with a bottle of olive oil by his side. Often a group of praying Christians would kneel behind him. The sick and lame, deaf and dumb were then called by name to the platform, where they roo were made to kneel. One by one they passed in front of Dr. Sung, pausing a minute or so while he ponted a hide oil tito the palm of his hand and tubbed it over the patient's forehead, offering a prayer as he did so. Often he quoted a verse of Scripture or said, "In the Name of Jesus!" Sometimes accompanying the woods with a shaip tap on the side of the bead. Patients were made to testify on the first possible occasion after the meeting. Only one sentence was allowed: "The Lord blessed me!" or "The Lord healed me!" This was intended to be an essential part of the exercise of faith, Once when a man with bad eyes came for prayer, he removed his spectacles and carefully put them in his pocket! Dr. Sung sharply rebuked such lack of faith. "You should have thrown them away, if you really believed!"

Dr. Sung was fully aware of the dangers of this work—of credulity and even of superstitition. But as far as he was concerned these meetings were primarily an opportunity for evangelism, it was of the first importance that the soul be saved, but if God should see fit to heal the body too, then all the gloty was given to 11im. And there were many who were rither healed or considerably relieved of suffering.

The following typical incidents took place in the village of Golden Well near Arnoy in Fukien in the early months of 1935. They are vouched for by one who personally observed each case and is now a leading church worker in Mantla in the Philippines.

Before Dr. Sung's visit to the town, reports had gone ahead of him from puople who had been attending the Amoy meetings. There was an old Buddhist zealor who was deeply superstitious and faithful in her peryers to the spirits. She had been almost blind for three years, and determined to test the reports of healing sho had heard. She attended Dr. Sung's meetings and was soundly converted. At the healing meeting, to which she was ear ired as usual in a scdan chair, when it came to her turn to be prayed for, Dr. Sung exclaimed, "Hallelujal, praise the Lord!" and immechately Mrs. Chua saw a great light and beginning to see for the first time for three years, gave glory to God. Returning home she was able to read her son's Bible. Soon the idols were destroyed and the home became a Christian home, Later all the family moved to Manila where Mrs. Chua rontinued to be a means of great blessing—a truly choice soul, radiant in her faith through many a trial.

A Christian lady who had been at the Amoy meetings became concerned about her father who was a sufferer from nephritis and was taking opium to relieve his suffering. She went home and persuaded the old man to go to the meetings. There he was both saved, cured of his disease and delivered from his opium habit. However, he was unwilling to destroy the stocks of opium habit, his home as his children insisted and proposed to self them. In the quarrel which ensued the old man got into a firry and fainted. When he came around again, he described a dream he had had which had been a warning voice from God to him; only then was he willing to destroy all his opium stocks.

Another professing Christian in the village had become a

Another professing Christian in the village had become a secret ding addict to relieve some chronic pain from which she suffered. Once after a church service, while injecting the morphine, the needle broke off. In het feat she cried to the Lord to heal her and to break the habit. Prayer was immediately answered and the woman's testimony at Dr. Sung's meetings was the first hat feated heavy about her secret plair.

There was a leper in Golden Well in an advanced stage of the disease. He had a Christian wife, but he himself was not saved. At Dr. Sung's meetings he definitely accepted the Saviour. The wife earned barely enough money from the meagre products of their small farm, and a theft one day reduced them almost to starvation. Fainting and wearly, she struggled to the services one evening, but at the church became completely unconscious. When she came round she related a dream she had of angels who offined to escort her to heaven. But she pleaded her helpless leper husband as a reason why she should stay on earth a while longer. Whereupon, the angel assured her that both she and her husband would be oned. She was immediately given a strong hody and later in the meetings, as D1. Sung prayed for her husband, the disease was arrested and the nodular swellings on his body gradually faded away, leaving only the old sears. He lived for many years and at the end had a triumphant passing from this world to the next, crying with his last breath, "The Lamb of God in spotless robes of white is roming to take me home!" The wife is still alive and their are relatives of the man still living in Manula.

There was a girl student who had often heard the gospel, but had never necepted it. She was a sufferer from tuberculosis, and in desperation went to the necetings to seek healing. Obtaining a little relief, she bought a Bible and a hymn-book secretly, but did not make an open profession of beltef. When the disease recurred her relatives resorted to prayer to the spirits for healing. Through the medium, the spirits demanded the destruction of the Bible before their prayers could be answered. The demand was carried out and at once the girl became possessed by a demon and eventually died in tetrible agony. This event emphasized the danger of an insincere repentance.

There was a poverty-stricken couple in Golden Well, the twenty-year-old man heing an opium-smoker. The wife attempted suicide by freezing to death on the nearby mountain, but failed. The kindness of the Christians than impressed her and she became a believer. Soon after this Dr. Stmg arrived and the woman was greatly blessed and joined one of the preaching bands, but the husband remained in the grip of the opium craving. At last, while one of the bonds was visiting the man, he asked for prayer for deliverance, and in answer to many prayers offered was completely delivered. His wife continued to be a powerful witness for Christ and was used in the casting out of demons.

The last case in Golden Well was that of a man suffering from a fonl disease which no doctor had been able to cure. The man was both saved and healed at Dr. Sung's meetings in Amoy. Later, his sister-in-law, a prostitute, attended Dr. Sung's meetings in Golden Well and professed to believe. But at the testimony neeting, to cover up her own sinful past, she spoke only of what God had done for her brother-in-law. Immediately, she became possessed with an evil spirit, and in one of the meetings became violent. Dr. Sung and all the workers present offered carnets and infied peayer for the woman, but whenever they sang "In the Cross, in the Cross be my glory evet..." she became violent again. It was not until two years after Dr. Sung's visit that she found final deliverance. She became a sincere Christian and a real student of the Bible. Later she went to Bible School and is still a Christian worker in Fukien.

a Christian worker in Fukien.

Whar happened at Golden Well could be duplicated over and over again. There were many substantiated claims for healing and the benefits were lasting. Others obtained no help at all and some claims were subsequently shown to be unjustified. But as far as Dr. Sung was concerned, the meetings antanged to pray for the sick were valuable evangelistic opportunities and many found Christ who had come only to seek healing.

CHAPTER EIGHTEEN

Casting up the Highway

HE green, sun-scaked lands surrounding the South China Sca have for centuries been a magnet to attract the over-flowing population of South China, where the struggle for existence is so intense. The people of Pikien and Kwangtung are adventurous, sea-going people and colonies of them are found to-day in a vast crescent of islands from the Philippines to Thailand.

In West Borneo (Kalimanran) there is a rown called Sambas which has a 1,000-year-old settlement of Chinese. Chinese were early arrivals in the larger cities of Java and Samana and have also found their way to the Celebes and the Molnecas in search of wealth and happiness. A very large majority of the Singapore population of 1,000,000 is Chinese. Two million more Chinese are scattered through the jungles, the rubber plantations and the tin-mining towns of Malaya. In Siam, Burma and Indo-China, the streets of the cities swarm with millions of Chinese who were either born there or who have come from China in recent years to seek their fortune.

Mr. Victor Purcell, in his book The Chinese in South-East Asia, calculates the total Chinese population of these lands at 10,000,000. In the island of Formusa there were, before the war, an additional 5,000,000 people, mostly Chinese, living under Japanese rule. Many of these unmigrants have learned to speak the languages of the countries of their adoption, but nearly all retain their native dialects for use in the home. Hokkien is the latiguage of those from the south of Fukien Province, while Hakka and Cattonese are both spoken by settlers who have come from Kwangtung Province.

Those who were already Christians carried their faith with them and set up Christian communities wherever they wem. Christians are a ommerous and influential element in the population of "Overseas Chinese" in the "Nanyang" (or "Southern Ocean"). They always maintained a close link with the maintained and it was inevitable that sooner or later the movements that were sweeping through the churches of China would begin to affect these overseas Chinese churches too. Dr. Sung made seven different missionary journeys to Formosa, the Philippines and the "Nanyang", and everywhere the same signs followed the preaching of the Word and determined the future character of the Chinese churches of these areas.

the Chinese churches of these areas. The first invitation from outside Dr. Sung's own country came from the Philippines in 1935. The blessing which had everywhere followed Dr. Sung's ministry had been reported in Christian magazines or in letters from relatives who had been converted or brought into a deeper experience of Christ in the great campaigns in Foochow, Amoy, Swatow or Canton, Three Churches in Manila—the Episcopal, the United Evangelical and the Christian Assembly Churches—mitted in extending at invitation to Dr. Sung to conduct meetings from June 6th to 14th, He travelled to Manila after another great campaign in Peking in Crowds gathered from all over Luzon and from other islands in attend the meetings. About 800 people filled every sear and blocked the aisles and stairways of the Chinese United Evangelical Church. Pastor Silas Wang of the United Church who took a prominent part in the oreetings said: "Dr. Sung had one line of teaching: sin, repensance, the new birth, holiness." As usual, his demunciations of sin were fearless—the sins of professing Christians especially so. Sometimes he would single out an individual, a pastor or office bearer in the thurch, and say, "There is ain in your heart!" and he was always right. Sung used some of the old illustrations and some new ones. Once he appeared carrying a miniatrate coffin half full of stones. These represented sins committed and the death which sin would bring. For every fresh sin committed a stone would be added to the load until the bearer was almost bowed down under the weight. To emphasize the New Birth, he came on to the platform one day wearing an old gown with the names of different sits written all over it. Then, at the appropriate moment in the address, he discarded the old gown "at the Cross" and put on a new robe of righteonsuess produced from somewhere? The setmons lasted as usual for two hours or more with the favourite chouses copiously interspersed. Evangelism was followed by instruction to the newly converted and the other Christians, and towards the end there was a healing meeting. Crowds went to the platform to be prayed for, yet Dr. Sung, days later, would meet individuals and, recognizing them as among those who had sought healing, ask "How are you?" He had a prodigious memory.

He had a prodigious memory.

There were lasting results from these meetings. The United Evangelical Church was greatly strengtheted and its evangelistic zeal kudled. The Evangelistic Band organization which was formed at that time was still active in 1953, eighteen years later, having survived the years of war and grown out of all recognition. It was divided into ren sections, each with its own leader and its own responsibility for prison, hospital and radio evangelism, for personal visitation, cottage meetings, devotional gatherings and the like, A missionary, writing in 1954, reports: "So many of the Philippines are the direct result of John Sung's ministry."

One of those who became wedged intolerably in the crowded church, his head cocked back to enable him to breathe, was the Chinese Consul-General in Manila, a man who had lived a life of debauchery and sin in Peking, Singapore and now the Philippine. He drank and gambled in a big way, once losing $180,000 in Hong Kong money at a single sitting. Then his wife died, and it was his second bride-to-be who persuaded him to go and listen to Dr. Sung, "the madman", who from the platform bluntly described his sinful ways, But repentance was too had and after being transferred to Nauking he continued in his life of sin, despite his wife's insistence on reading the Scriptures and prayer. When Dr. Sung visited Nauking again, on the fifth night of the campaign this brand was plucked from the burning and was born again at the age of thirty-eight. And to-day he is the warden of a newly opened Bible College in Java, a meek man of whom it is hard to believe such a lurid history.

to believe such a lurid history.

Before returning to China, Dr. Sting paid a visit to Cebn, one of the smaller islands of the Philippines, where a temporary meeting-place had been arranged in a large tunber-yard. Reports of the extraordinary meetings and of cases of healing in answer to prayer excited the interest of a backsliding Christian who went along out of curiosity to see the fun and to join in the cutertainment which Dr. Sung's preaching provided. She was at the same time determined not to look into Dr. Sung's eyes, lest she come under what she regarded as their mesonetic influence! The preaching was, as usual, energetic and acrobatic, leaving the preacher bathed in perspiration and his blue gown dripping wet. This same Mrs. Hwang, now a deaconness in the Cebn church, witnessed a certain newspaper editor named Chow wonderfully and instantaneously healed. He had been bowed down with a hump on his back. As soon as prayer had been offered for him at the special gathering to pray for the sick, he can outside and stood up straight and began to exercise his limbs, shouting as he did so, "I am straight again! I am straight again!" Later this man organized a "Serd Sowers League" which remains active to this day. The members claim that any night, at the third watch, the voice of D1. Sung can still be heard exclaiming "Tather!" or "Lord]"

Among the outstanding Christian workers in the Philippines to-day is Miss Kho, the Headmistress of the Westminster School, It was through Dr. Sung that she entered into fullness of life, and she was one of the twelve who went over to China to attend the first Bible Institute at Hangchow in July.

first Bible Institute at Hangchow in July.

On the whole, however, the effect of this first overseas campaign does not seem to have been as great as that of subsequent campaigns among Chinese overseas.

Recently Dr. Sung had been greatly burdened about the general absence of proper Bible teaching in the churches, and to attempt to meet this need he announced that a two weeks' "Bible Institute" would be held in Hangchow in July.

As a Bible teacher, John Sung would have hornified the great Bible teachers of our time. His exergests was untenable, His ideas were often fanciful in the extreme—as, for instance, his theory that Heaven must be in the northern firmatorin because the stars are fewest these! And that Hell was in the centre of the earth, where there is fire! And yet he was able to hold his audiences and give them a familiarity with the contents of Scupeure. His own studies in the sanitorium in America had given him a grasp of the wide sweep of revealed struch, and he loved to take his audiences through long sections of the Bible, suggesting a key thought for the polymer had been also and characters.

the under standing of each chapter.

One system which Dr. Sung originated and which has been slavishly followed by some of his disciples in the Bible Schools founded by him is known as the "treadmill". On the theory that all the chapters of the Old Testament find a counterpair in the chapters of the New, sindents are set to study these corresponding chapters to discover the spiritual connection between them! This has often been very difficult for anyone who has not the mind of a genius like Dr. Sung!

But John himself was foll of the Bible. He read nothing else except the daily paper. Since his experience in America he had been a man of one book ordy. Hours a day used to be spent on his knees with his open Bible and the notebook in which be wrote down the tenths that were revealed to him, only a small part of which he ever shared with others. His mind was completely saturated with the Word of God, and so, even if his Bible teaching was completely original, few men can have been so successful in infecting others with his own deep laye for the flook.

in infecting others with his own deep love for the Book.

Frank Ling recalls that "his way of dividing the Word of God was very poculiar. He never preached from just one text, but expounded the Scriptures paragraph by paragraph or chapter, this was not a new way of preaching. Others have attempted it before, but how dry it was to listen to! Yet you never got dry in Dr. Sung's meetings! People loved to study the Word of God after his meetings. So, wherever he went, the Bible Societies were soon sold out of their stocks and had to wire urgently to the cennal depots for fresh supplies!"

Though Dt. Simg was no theologian, he nevet hisitated to enter into controversy in defence of what he saw to be the truth. He held his convictions with great tenacity. So, whether it was Dr. Oliver on eschatology, Dr., Eddy on the liberal interpretation of the Christian message of Mr. Watchman Nee on the doctrines of the Church, Dr. Sung entered the arena with assurance,

The Hangehow Bible Institute was a great success in making Christians awate of the dangers that existed and of the necessity of knowing their Bibles so well that they could meet the errors that were abounding on all hands,

In August, Dr. Simg travelled to Singapore on the first of seven visits. The churches of the colony, so intunately connected with the churches of Fukien and Kwangtung, had heard a great deal about their great compatriot. A tremendous welcome was prepared him. It was at this great crossmads of the world that Dr. Sung was to make as deep and lasting an impression as anywhere. Many are the Christians there to-day who look back to the visits of John Sung as the time of their first real Christian experience.

The first campaign began on Angust 30th and lasted until September 12th, There had been sound preparation by the local church union committee and the meetings were held in the Telok Ayer Methodist Church. Dr. Sung preached forty times in the fourteen days and Singapore had never seen or heard the like before. The Chinese Christians were deeply stirred and outsiders crowded to hear the unusual preacher, Over 1,300 people signed decision cards on profession of faith, and halfway through the campaign, on September 7(l), 111 evangelistic teams consisting of three persons or more were organized, with a total membership of 503. Over eighty young people dedicated their lives to whole-time service for God. One of the converts in this campaign was the Rev. Timothy Tow, who subsequently trained for the ministry in China and is now the minister of a church in Singapore and the General Secretary of the Malaysia Pioneer Mission, The evangelistic organization which came to birth during this first campaign adopted the English name of the Singapore Christian

Evaugelistic League, and continues to this day to be a powerful factor in the church life of Singapore, eighteen years later.

From Singapore, Dr. Sung crossed from the island to the mainland to hold campaigns throughout the Malay Peninsula. From Johore Bahru he motored through the pincapple and rubber plantations to Muar on the south-west coast. Then he went to Malacca, the historic old town a little further north, From there. he turned inland to Scremban, the capital of Negri Sembilan. And so eventually to Penang, the lovely ide off the north-west coast which "God leissed at creation". Missions were also held at the rast coast town of Kota Bahrn in Kelantan and at the west coast town of Sitiawan in Perak. Throughout Malaya the Chinese dominated the cities and held the commerce and the wealth of the colony in their hands. The Muslim Malays, whom Great Britain recognizes as the true natives and rulers of the country, keep largely to their own kampangs or villages and live by fishing or farming. They are almost entirely unaffected by the Christian message and the only churches in Malaya other than those for Europeans are Clanese or Tanul,

After this series of meetings in which the Christians were violently shaken out of their case and complacency and sin, Dr. Sing sailed from Penang to Medan in northern Sumatra at the invitation of yet another Chinese community which had a flourishing Christian church and into which his coming brought

By October 18th he was back in Singapore, this time for a convention for Christians lasting a week. Twenty-one new preaching bands were added to the existing total and the fires of revival were further stirred up. And 10 ended the first triumphant visit to the "Nanyang", Over 5,000 people had professed conversion. So great were the crowds to see him off on the boat that the P. & O. Sreamship authorities could not follow their usual practice of allowing the friends of passengers on board at will. Instead, they were asked to form a queue, and filed on to the ship up one gangway in a long stream, shook hands with John Sung on the deck and left by the second gangway. Over 1,000 people said goodbye to him in this way. He was deeply moved to see so many sheep, as it were, without a shepherd, and it was on this voyage that he determined to hold a second Bible Institute, probably in Amoy.

After the ship had sailed, he discovered to his surprise and embarrassment an extra package in his cabin; a baby, duly wrapped up and labelled from an anonymous donor! The Bethel orphanage in Shanghai took charge of the little foundling.

Mr. Newman Shih, the pastor of the Christian and Missionary Alliance in Shanghai at that time, had interested his congregation in Dr. Sung's travels in the Southern Ocean. Now that Dr. Sung was back in Shanghai, an invitation was sent to him from the church to come and give a report of his work to those who had so faithfully been praying for him. Dr. Sung flatly refused. Mr. Shih went to see him and pleaded that those who had prayed had a right to hear how their prayers had been answered. Otherwise, how could they be expected to go on praying?
"Won't you pray about this before giving a final answer, to see whether God would like you to come or not?"

Dr. Sung thought a moment and then retired opstairs to his room. A little while later he appeared again with his auswer: "All right, I'll go!"

Mr. Shih was delighted, and the Christians were greatly encouraged as they heard how revival had come to the Chinese churches overseas.

CHAPTER NINETEEN

Shaking the Nation 1935-1936

ATE in 1935, John Sung paid a rerum visir to his own native district of Hinghwa. He had temporarily joined up with one of the Bethel bands for four days of meetings. The weather was very cold, and only about twenty of the country pastors came in to the meetings held in the home of the Rev. and Mrs, Stanley Carson of the Methodist Episcopal church. The chapel was far too bleak in that weather. The joyful, contagious Christian lives of the young preachers and their messages in word and song were an inspiration, and some sick people found relief after Dr. Sung had prayed for them. Dr. Sung addressed a mass meeting of students on the final day of their stay in the city.

At the end of 1935 and early in 1936, Dr. Sing held meetings in Shanghai. The first series was held in the Moore Memorial Church, which holds 2,000 people. The meetings were organized under the auspices of the Shanghai Evangelistic Association, Mr. Newman Shih was die interpreter. He describes his ex-preience as an unforgettable one. There was a tightly-packed audience. Dr. Sung preached in his usual lively and energetic way. The listeners were utterly absorbed with what they heard. Mr. Shih had the sensation of interpreting for a man possessed with an extraordinary power from the Holy Spirit, a power which seemed to fill the building and brought the people out to the front in their crowds to confess sin and get right with

During the second series of meetings, Mr. Shih twice had the experience of being ordered off the platform by Dr. Sung for hesitation in translation or for modifying some of the more extreme castigations of certain political groups then active in Shanghai. Other interpreters had had similar experiences.

Dr. Sing now headed north once more, and in March held great meetings at Tsinan and Tenghsien in the province of Shantung. At Tsinan one missionary reported: "very great blessing". His earlier visit with the Bethel Band to Tenghsien was well remembered Tenghsien was the centre of much Christian educational work. No building in the city was deemed large enough to hold the crowds which were expected to attend. So the church leaders erected a mat shed on a vacant lot, large enough to seat 1,000 people.

enough to sent 1,000 people.

Dr. Martin Hopkins described the meetings in these words:
"Seminary and high school students and Christians from far and near filled the shed three times daily for eight days. Dr. Sung is a preacher of the pune gospel of grace and his sayle is somewhat like Billy Sunday's. There were 500 professions of faith and te-consecration. Much stress was laid out personal evangelism and at the close of the meetings 130 evangelistic bands were organized, chiefly among the students of the sentinary and Bible School. One group consisted of the worknen who put up the shed and do the work bere. Our students received a great spiritual uplificand as a result are most cannot in carrying on the work of reaching the imsaved."

After a week's meetings at Liuho, Kiangsu in March and the organizing of another fifty witness bands, in April, 1936, D1. Sung crossed over to Formosa, "the Beautiful kle", which was there a part of the Japanese Empire. The inhabitants, however, were mostly Chinese and spoke the dialect of Dr. Sung's own province. Two pastors of the Presbyterian Church had gone to China in 1933 specially to invite the evangelist to visit the churches on the island. Campaigns were arranged in the three main raties of the island: Taipeh, the administrative centre in the north, Taichung in the centre and Tainan in the south. A week was spent in each place. So great were the crowd anticipated that once again a temporary structure of bandhoo and thatch was elected in each city. In Taipeh, about 1,000 attended the meetings. When

Dr. Sung moved on to Taichung, however, many of diese followed him and the numbers attending were twice as large. As the endusiasm gained momentum and more than ever followed the crest of the wave, thete were 4,000 or twice as many again attending the meetings in Tainan. The closing testimony meetings at Tainan will long be remembered. Well over 5,000 people in Taichung and Tainan made profession of faith and 460 offered themselves as voluntary evangelists: $4,000 in cash as well as gold rings and jewellery were contributed for the support of the 205 evangelistic bands that were formed. Many sick people were healed in answer to prayer, although the Japanese authorities forbade "healing meetings" and anonumg with oil.

In every place there were deeply moving scenes as the Holy Spirit convicted men and women of sin. There were many teconciliations between old enemies and apologies were made publicly for wrongs done, A new spirst of love and unity came into being in place of the dissension and hostility which had been paralysing the church life in many a congregation. There were mothers who saw their prodigal sons come to them for forgiveness and wives who were remitted to their estranged husbands. A dissolute drunkard, opium-addict and gambler was wooderfully saved and set free from his furty years' bondage. Throughout the whole church there was a great revival of Bible-reading and public witness. Results in the shape of increased church attendance were speciacular. Numerous baptisms followed Dr. Sung's departure, in Taichung attendance at the Sunday School doubled its previous weekly attendance of 200. In the same centre 4 hundred preaching bands were formed and continued their witness in the surrounding countryside for at least three years until the Japanese placed a han on this kind of evangelism. There were four hundred bands formed in Tainan, in the south of the island.

One incident is of special interest. A certain church elder from North China attended the meetings and one day Dr. Sung, nor knowing the man at all, pointed at him and said, "You hypocrite!" The elder mistakenly accused the pastor of the church of informing against him. The next night the elder sat in a different place, but the accising finger picked him out and the same charge was repeated. The elder, with a hidden sin of great gravity on his conscience and torn with fear of discovery, had a nervom breakdown. The church arranged special prayer meetings for his recovery. One day, convinced that the patter had been exposing his past, he threatened to kill him, and proceeded to invite the pastor to his home. Against the persuasion of firends who knew about the threat, the pastor accepted the invitation. No sooner had he set foot inside the main entrance than the elder struck ar him murderously with a knife. The pastor fell suddenly to his kneet crying out, "Lord, save Elder ——)" leaving the knife to crash hat alessly against the wall, breaking itself in half. Seeing this, the elder himself fell to his kneets by the pastor's sade and poutted our a confession of his crimes. He soon came right into forgiveness of sins and became a zealous Christian worker.

Dr. Sung sailed from the port of Kaohsiung for Shanghat on May 9th, after revival scenes unprecedented in Formosa's listoty. There followed campaign after campaign in Canton, and the coastal provinces before he struck inland again for Anhwei Province. Mr. George A. Birch of the China Inland Mission wrote in June from Shancheng: "The good news I have to tell you is about revival which has come through Dr. Sung's meetings. The meetings were for C.I.M., and Methodist churches in this city and the building was packed daily with several hundred Christians and enquirers. Dr. Sung's messages were very fine and wonderfully complete in their scope. God used him to stir up the people to a deep realization of their sins, to true repentance and confession of sins. I know of two men who destroyed, one his malifong set worth $20 and the other his cigarette-making machine. A gambler who had just won $87 turned the money over to the Methodist church, in our own household there has been a tremendous change. For myself, I can say, 'The Lord has done great things for one, whereof I am glad.' Then our servant has been saved. His mother, a cold chutch member, is now bringing her friends to the meetings, Our cook's wife, for whom we did not have much hope, has repented and has twice testified with tears to the fact that the Lord has saved her."

Seventy preaching bands were formed after the meetings, many of which are known to have continued in operation for at least ren years, Many of those who were saved or restoued became outstanding evangelists and leaders in the South Anhwei church. Dr. Sung left an indelible mark upon the spiritual life of the churchs of the whole area,

Mr. Gordon Dunn, Superintendent of the China Infant Mission work in this province, wrote in 1953: "I have talked to many men who are now outstanding evangelists and leaders in Christian work who were restored to fellowship and brought to the place of dedication of their lives wholly to the Lord's service through the ministry of Dr. Sung."

From Anhwei Dr. Sung returned to Hong Kong for yet another series of meetings there from June 14th to 23td. By this time Mr. Peter Chung* and Miss Esther Hsieh (Mrs. Chung) were among Dr. Sung's closest friends. Mr. Chung had been led to the Lord though his ministry and Miss Hsieh, a Bible School graduate, was being drawn into the circle of Dr. Sung's co-workers. Mr. and Mrs. Chung have continued to serve the Lord in Hong Kong and Kowloon ever since and are frequently away on evangelistic campaigns.

The time was drawing near for the Second Bible Institute, which was so much on Dr. Sung's heart. This Institute had been widely advertised to take place in Amoy from July 10th to August 9th. During his return visits to places in north and south China which had earlier experienced revival, Dr. Sung had been saddened to find some whom God had revived earlier again growing cold in their love for Christ. He was greatly concerned, too, at the spread of heresy and erroneous Scriptural interpretations, and he longed to see Christians better established in the Scriptures. One thousand and six hundred delegates from all parts of China and some of the overseas settlements of Chinace converged on Amoy. They came from Harbin, Peking, Chefoo,

* See Appendix 1.

Nanking, Shanghai, Hankow, Foochow, Formosa, Singapore, Penang, the Malay States and the Philippines, speaking a variety of dialects but one in Christ, to hear the man to whom most of them owed their spiritual life. They were accommodated in six schools and held the meetings in Trinity Church. Each delegation gave a report during the conference on the progress of the Evangelistic Band organization.

At the opening meeting, delegates from each place went in groups on to the platform and sang a chorus of their own choice. The planist was Miss Esther Hsteh (Mrs. Peter Chung) who subsequently became Dr. Song's interpreter and assistant, Dr. Sung's first address was an exposition of I Tim. i.3-30 under the following headings: (1) Distinguish truth from error (verses 3, 4); (2) pursue love (verse 5); (3) and humility (verses 6-11); (4) give glory to God (verse 17); (5) fight the good fight (verses 12-18); (6) keep a good conscience (verses 19-20). This was a fair sample of Dr. Sung's method of handling Scripture.

The next day, the regular time-table of two long sessions a day began-7.30 to 11 a.m. and 7 to 10.30 p.m. The time was the middle of a southern summer, with high temperatures and great huooidity, But, beginning at the first chapter of Genesis, Dr. Sung took his audience right through the cutive Bible, chapter by chapter, until he reached the last chapter of Revelation. These were no evatigelistic talks, nor were they revival messages. Each and every session was pure Bible study, interspersed with numerous references to his own personal experience as a Christian, all the time emphasizing the need fot holiness and consecration of life. Has any other Bible teacher ever attempted anything comparable? Surely this was a phenomenal effort for one man in a month! All the addresses were taken down verbatim and published in book form the same year. The volume was published again in Formosa in 1952 and contains 554 pages,

At the final session Dr. Sung said: "Beloved brethien and sisters. Our work of thirty days is ended Before God and men I stand unashanned, for I have spoken unto you all that the Lord told me to say. At the start I feared the physical strength of speaker and interpreter might be insufficient. But to-night we are still able to stand before you on the platform. Within one month the Lord has enabled us to study the whole Bible book by book, and now this Bible is yours to take home with you. I have but given you a sort of key and you must go on studying for yourselves. It is full of hidden treasures for you to discover. And may the Lord greatly use you as good soldiers of these last days. I do not know when I shall die, but every day I have on earth I must fulfil that day's duty by distributing to you what the Lord has entrusted to me, and then when I do die I shall sre the Lord in peace. During these thirty days I have trembled before the Lord, that I might rightly expound to you the Word of God.

"And now my task is done. You must go home, and I can only pray constantly for you, trusting that the work will bear much fruit. 'They that sow in tears shall reap in joy', and I believe that the Lord will by no means allow this conference to have been in vain. In spite of opposition and slander, I have a clear conscience before God and man. I have merely preached the gospel with might and main without seeking the gain of one penny, I feel almost as though I had been in prison this month. Many people have wanted to see me and I must apologize for not being able to receive you properly. I simply could not help it. I was too busy for conversation, as I had to prepare spiritual provisions to give you every day. I have not even had time to open the letters I have received, which I shall have to tead on the ship. God bless you and take you home to study the Bible diligently. Freely you have received, freely give. Share with many others the grace you have been given. The more you give the more you will have. The less you give the less you will find you have. Linally, may God he with you until the Lord comes again. Amen.

CHAPTER TWENTY

He Must Increase

AFTER, the predigious effort in Amoy, any other man would have felt justified in taking a rest. But, without stopping to consider such a possibility, he went ahead immediately with campaigns in the crowded cities of Canton, Hong Keng and Kowloon before sailing for Singapore en tonte for Sarawak on the island of Borneo.

As the boar for Borneo was delayed, the Christians in Singapore took advantage of the delay to arrange four days' training classes for the leaders in the Christian Evangelistic League. A second election of officers was also held under Dr. Sung's guidance.

There is a large community of Chinese in Borneo, both in British North Borneo and in what, at the time, was Dutch Borneo. Sibn in Sarawak was the chosen place for Dr. Sung's campaign, in which 1,583 people were brought to repertance and faith in Christ! The meetings began on September 21st and went on until October 1st, and were the sensation of the century in this out-of-the-way place. Very few families in the rown or even the neighbouring towns remained totouched by the tremendous preaching. There is a Chinese living in London in whose heart the first seeds were sown at the Sibn campaign. He was then a little boy living with relatives who had no interest in the gospel. But the vivid dramatization of Bible stories and Christian truth made a deep impression on his mind. He grew to manhood and wandered far from God, but the seed eventually bore fruit when "after many days" this godless man found Christ in England!

Bresides the many conversions, there were over 100 who dedicated themselves to the Lord's service. Righty-eight witness bands were formed in Sibu alone, while there were thirty-eight more in two neighbouring towns. Four young women were sent over to Nauking to be trained for Christian service. The war but the Christians of Borneo hard. Nevertheless, the preaching bands continued their witness right through the Japanese occupation in face of great dangers and difficulties.

Returning to Singapore, Dr. Sing conducted a ten-day Bible Study Conference from December 11th to 20th. He took Exodus, Leviticus, Numbers, Joshua and Daniel in the Old Testament and expounded the spiritual significance in the Tabernacle and the Offerings. In the New Testament the books studied were Luke's Gosnel. Romans and Jude.

On December 22nd, John Sung hearded the S.S. Conte Verdi to return to Shanghai. The demonstration of affection and the mormous enthusiasm of the Christians attracted the attention of a trpotter of the Straits Times. The following account appeared in the issue of December 3td, 1936:

"A young Chinese stood in the lounge of the Inlian liner Come Verde in Singapore last night and brought tears to the eyes of more than 500 people. He was John Sing, the Chinese evangelist, who was returning to China after his second campaign for Christianity in Singapore. He was seen off by more than 1,000 exected Chinese, who paraded on the wharf waving flags and invaded the decks and saloons of the liner. Dr. Sung addressed his followers briefly; they sang hymns and smiled cheerfully, but fully half of them were wreping, some silently and some more emotionally. Thry were saying goodbye to a man who claims to have made thousands of Chinese converts to Christianity, to a man who was once locked in a mental asylum in the United States and who is now the 'hot gospellet' of China and the Chinese.

"Song is a man who puts himself and Christianity into the news by his unorthodox ways, which always amony the orthodox. He has made whitelywind tours of Malaya and everywhere he has left behind bands of converts. I watched him last night aboard the Conte Verde. Around him, were hundreds of Singapore Chinese—mostly working-class men and avomen with a fair sprinkling of young men and good-looking girls—and he turned the liner's lounge into an improvised mission hall.

"His supporters, who woic the badge and waved the flag of the Chinese Christoan Evangelistic Band, rarely took their eyes off him. He spoke but futle and then ismally an intimate wood to someone near him. Then someone, inoved by the occasion, bunst into the first line of a hymn in Chinese, which was taken up by everybody. Srewards, travellers, dock officials and ship's officers looked on amazed, And most amazed of all, let it be said, were a number of Roman Catholic puests returning from Rome to their stations in the far Fax. I noticed two nims attracted by the waving of flags bearing the insignia of the Cross go into the lounge; they seemed to wonder what it was all about and certainly never identified the young Dr. Sung, who looked more like a tennis player than an evangelist."

Early in 1937. Dt. String carried out yet another tout of North China. Wat with Japan was Jooming ever more menacingly, while the Government of China was being threatened and goaded to action by the Communist Party. Signs followed the preaching of the Word in Chefoo, Tieutsin, Peking, Paoting, Taiyuan and many another city. In Chefoo, nearly all the remaining unconverted girls in a Christian high school accepted Christ, and many of them are serving Christ in widely scattered places to-day. In Taiyuan, the capital of Shansi, no church building was big enough to hold the crowds that gathered from all over the province A tent to hold a thousand was erected. At the opening unceting on June 27th, Dr. Sung recognized some of the Christians from Pingyao, the city to the sould where he had held a campaign in May, 1933. His memory was phenomenal. In spire of the real work of the Holy Spirit wimessed at those meetings, not a few had taken offence at Dr. Sung's brusque manners. Now he apologized:

"When I was with you in 1933, I was very carnal! But I hope you will see a change for the better in me now and find me rather more spiritual?"

Six days of meetings resulted in over 300 people seeking spiritual help, and there were many who testified to physical healing.

The meetings ended on July 5th, just two days before the infamous "Dooble Seventh", when the shooting incident took place at the Marco Polo Bridge ontside Peking—the event which touched off the Sino-Japanese War. With the tense atmosphere existing at the end of the meetings and with war already inevitable, Dr. Sinig decided not to go to Peking to fulfil an engagement there, but hurried back instead to join his family in Shanghai.

Mt. A. T. F. Reynolds of the China Inland Mission, who had attended the Taiyuan conference, travelled by the same train. He had gone early to the station to secure a good seat. Later a party of Christians boarded the train to secure a seat for Dr. Sung. A place was found in the very section of the coach in which Mt. Reynolds was seated. Knowing that John Sung hated effusiveness and was not particularly cordial towards foreigners, Mr. Reynolds deliberately paid no attention to his fellow traveller and engaged its conversation with other Christians. The conversation turned to the subject of the "Team of Christian Workers", a band of Chinese Christians labouring successfully in Shansi under the leadership of the Rev. David Yang, Dr. Sung had evidently never heard of this work before and, after listening for a long time, he leaned across and asked Mr. Reynolds to tell him about it. There followed a long and profitable conversation, which was continued the next day after both men had tried to snatch a few fitful bours' sleep. Dr. Sung had had an arduous campaign and be could easily have travelled in comfort in a first-class sleeping bet th. But he elected to travel third class and to take what sleep be could with head and hands risting on the table.

On arrival at their destination, Dr. Sung invited Mr. Reynolds to accompany him on a visit to a local church and asked him to a med at a restaurant. They accepted the hot cloth offered them to wash their faces and hands and sat down to sip tea and wait for the evening meal to be served. But Dr. Sung was not one to waste a minute. He produced his diary and in the minute and fine handay writing he always used he began to write up his journal.

This experience suggests an explanation of Dr. Sung's brusqueness. One of the great temptations of a popular and successful preacher is to allow himself to be over-exalted and over-exteemed by his admirers. Was Dr. Sing's brusqueness and alooffices in part his protective mechanism?—a pose to ward off flattery and adulation, rspecially when faced with expressions of grantude of commendation? It may have been.

There appears to have been a Third Bible Institute at Foochow starting in late July, 1937. It followed the same lines as its predecessor, but was not on the same scale, owing to the fact that the country was now at wat. Dr. Sung arrived back in Shanghai on August 13th, the very day that the Japanese Navy launched its attack on that city.

Undecrered by the ever-growing proportions of the war, Dr. Sung decided to go ahead with his schedule in the North and North-west. In October, at Sian, the Shensi capital, the usual heavy programme was undertaken. Dr. Sung led the singing himself and a choins for the day frequently punctuated each address, a practice which made it hard to doze for long! The sermons were his old favoruties: the Lost Sheep, the Sermon on the Mount, the Richt Man and Lezatus and the Coninthian Hymn of Love—all of them dramatically illustrated with an energy amazing for so slight a frame. One day, preaching on Saul and the Amalekites, he snipped off the simple, white long gown which he always wore, rolled it up, and stuffed it inside his shirt, letting the articince know that the bulge was unconfessed sin! As confession of one sin after another was made, the gown was pulled out bit by bit until every sin had been fully confessed. Then the whole gown was torn out with a short of "Hallehijah!" And the great crowd tose to sing "O come to my heart, Lord Jesus, there is toom in my heart for Thee!"

A missionary of the English Baptist Mission who attended the meetings and was fully aware of the criticisms levelled by many at Dr. Sung gave her impressions of the preacher:

"To me this was New Testament Christianity—vibrating, vital, compelling, the Holy Spirit given unto us! There were scores of decisions at every service. . . . It was very moving. . . . At the close of the meetings, witness bands were organized and so the influence spread all over the Stan plain. It is evident now that the ministry of such evangelists was God's gracious gift to His people in China to prepare them for the fiery trial of the Japanese War and the fiercer testing under Communist rule."

One woman who had been a nominal Christian and a heavy smoker mer with God at these meetings, dedicated her life to His service and later became the Bible-woman of the church in Lanchow, the provincial capital of Kansu.

The outbreak of war with Japan prevented any further visits abroad mail the spring of 1938, when Dt. Stung travelled to Bangkok on a first visit to Thailand (Siam). The visit was by private invitation and not sponsored officially by the churches.

Miss Margarer McCord of the American Presbyterian Mission recalls how she stood with a group of members of the Chinese Church in Thailand awaiting his arrival at the church. A delegation had gone to meet Dr. Sung on the ship. When he arrived, Miss McCord was impressed by the slender figure with the smiling black eyes and the shock of hair dropping over his forchead.

The Bangkok meetings were held in the large Baptist church built by Dr. Grosheck. Reports of this sensational evangelist had not impressed the missionaries and John Sung was regarded with mixed feelings by most of rhem. But the Chinese gave hint a warm welcome and he was the guest of the Rev. Boon Mark Getesarn. For a whole mouth he preached twice a day: to the Christians in the mornings and to the outsiders in the evenings. A thousand or so people attended the mission and there were about 700 professed conversions, among them the present pastor of the church and his wife. A dozen or so Christians suitendered their lives for whole-time service and about 200 joined themselves into seventy evangelistic bands pledged to go out witnessing at least once a week. They were to meet once a month to report their experiences, and there were to be regular united evangelistic and devotional meetings. Reports from Thailand show that these evangelistic bands are still active in 1954.

Miss McCord recalls that never before had she seen the Chinese Christians in Thailand so aroused. This was the answer to the prayer of thirty years, "Lord, send a revival?"

From Siam, Dr. Sinng's littletary took him for a month to Indo-China. Fifteen years later missionaries and Chinese Christians still wax enthusiastic as they recall those weeks of blessing. Everyone was unanimous in the opinion that his visit brought the greatest spiritual impact and the best results of any similar visit from an outsider, foreign or Oriental. Both Chinese and Victnamese attended the meetings and as usual, Dr. Sing used an interpreter, speaking rapidly, sometimes in English, sometimes in Mandaiin. There was a Cantonese-speaking pastor who was indisposed and really unfor to undertake the task of interpretation. Others were available, but Dr. Sung insisted on having this man or none at all. "Don't be afraid to die!" he told him He himself, weak in body, drove himself mercilessly and expected others to keep up with his pace,

Those who were meeting the great evangelist for the first time were struck by his simplicity in dress and absence of any desire to make a good platform appearance. He was even inclined to be careless in this respect. There was no outward indication that here was a scholar and a preacher. He was impatient with anything that looked like pride or self in others and studiously avoided anything in the way of pretension in his own conduct. Small talk he abhorred. His apparent lack of graciousness would have been offensive had his preaching not demonstrated his unusual spiritual power. Between the meetings he could never relax. The burden of his ministry rested licavily upon him and he remained at a high pitch of rension all the time.

Dr. Sung's faibles and uncanny qualities came our during his campaign in Saigon. In setting one one of his Gospel stories he completely threw his interpreter off his balance by actually spitting at him, an act which is as insulting in China as in the West. Once, noticing that one of the deacons showed no response to any of the invitations to confess specific needs for prayer, Dr. Sung named him and, with supreme disregard for the "face" to which Chinese attach such importance, surcastically suggested that, as the deacon evidently had arrived at victory in all points, it was time that he came out to give his tresimony! On another occasion, he invited all preachers who desired special prayer to hand in their names on a slip of paper. One of these lie immediately rejected, declaring the writer to be a hypocrite without even a glance at the name. In actual fact, the writer was a backslidden Christian. John Sung would tolerate no hypoerisy, no pride, and was a bitter enemy of any compromise with the "flesh". No one could escape coming under condemnation. Those who yielded to the Spirit made progress but those who resisted hecame hardened. The Chinese church in Cholon, a suburb of Saigon, remembers Dr. Sung's visit with thanksgiving. Many were permanently blessed at that time and the church still witnesses to the lasting results. The preaching bands formed are still actively at work to-day. For a time there were many would-be imitators of Dr. Sung's methods and even his mannerisms, but they soon found that they lacked his power without which the manner was

Dr. Sung's only visit to the South-west of China was in the summer of 1938. Mt, G. E. Metcalf of the China Inland Mission reported on this visit in these terms:

"The churches of Kumming, the Yumnan capital, have been stirred up as they never have been before. Three tribal Cluistians belonging to the Lisu attended the meetings and on their return have been used to stir up the Lisu church. The Spirit is working and there has been much confession of sin followed by a new zeal for the salvation of the lost."

In the lovely city of Tali, in the midst of the "Switzerland of China", where tribal peoples and Tibetans frequently rub shoulders with the Chinese at the markets, Dr. Sung's visir resulted in preaching hands being formed to evangelize the surrounding countryside.

The South-west, however, was not ready for revival and the campaigns there were not so successfitl as elsewhere, but Dr. Sung war made aware that there were others besides himself who were labouring for God with great self-sacrifice: Chinese and missionaries. This seems to have had the effect of producing a greater humility of spirit. Friends in Shanghai remarked on his return there:

"Hr's much more humble now! He even talks about becoming a country preacher himself!

Once while chatting to a friend, he is reported to have said:

"There are many people better than I! For exposition of the Scriptures, I am not equal to Watchman Nee! As a preacher, I am not up to Wang Ming-tao! As a writer, I cannot compute with Marcus Cheng! As a musician, I am far short of Timothy Chao! I have not the patience of Alfred Chow! As a public figure, 1 do not have the social graces of Andrew Gih! There is only one thing in which I excel them all; that is in serving God with every ounce of my strength!"

All those men were raised up for this generation as winneses. Dr. Sung respected there, but he was not afraid to speak his mind to them if he felt it to be necessary. The Rev. Timothy Chao had decided to leave China and to go abroad to the South Seas to escape the hand of the Japanese aggressor. But Dr. Simg watned him: "China is suffering under the aggressor. We should stay here to comfort the brethern and to help them. If you run away from the post God has appointed to you to find a more com-fortable life in the "Nauyang", God will most certainly chastise you and fetch you back again!" The Japanese did indeed catch up with any who shought to find refuge in Java and their sufferings there were great. The end of the war found Timothy Chao back in Shanghai and John's warning and prophecy were fulfilled]

Mr. Newman Shih also found John greatly changed. Calling on him soon after his return to Shanghat in August, 1938, he was greatly touched by his humble, quier attitude.

"I no longer care to rebuke people from the pulpit," John told him. "I prefer now to preach on subjects which edify and bring comfort to people. You see, the times have changed. . . .

Words like these made a deep impression on one who had known him well over a long period of years.

So evidently full of power by the Spirit was John Sung that the idiosyncrasies, the impatience, the apparent lack of graciousnesss and the incompromising denunciation of evil-doers had been unable to detract from the great affection in which he was held by thousands to whom he had been a voice crying in the wilderness, a messenger sent from God. His name became a household word wherever Chinese was spoken, and is still a "sweet memory to midriplied thousands". One who was born again in one of his meetings in China friteen years ago and is now serving the Lord in the Philippines was asked to tell soruething about Dr. Sung. Her voice softened and her eyes lit up as she said, in tones of deep affection "Ai-yal Sung Por-sir!" ("Ah me! Dr. Sung!"). And deep in the heart of Chinese Christians everywhere is a gratoful memory of the Chinese John the Baptist raised up to call the Chinese Church to repentance.

CHAPTER TWENTY-ONE

Burning Out for God

As the heat of the summer of 1938 passed, Dr. Sung sailed south again for Singapore for his fourth excursion into the "Nanyang". A great ten-day convention had been arranged, it was attended by all the enthusiasm and the spiritual power that had characterized the previous visits. Fifty-one new preaching bands were formed, making a total of (83, It was in Singapore that the work of Dr. Sung seems to have left the most permanent memorials in the form of organizations. Not only was there the Evangelistic League,* but on May 14th, 1937, a libble School had been started to train young converts for the service of the Lord. This Bible School is known as the "Golden Link" Bible School and was founded by Miss Leona Wu and Miss Ng Peck Loan to help an conserve the results of the revivals which Dr. Sung's ministry brought to Singapore and to train young Christians who dedicated their lives to God for full-time service. Miss Leona Wu has repeatedly been elected as the President of the Christian Evangelistic League since the time of its inauguration right up to the present.

its inauguration right up to the present.

After preaching two memorable sermons on November 13th and 14th on Rev. iii.7-11, "Behold I have set before thee an open door . . ." and II Cot. v.14, "For the love of Christ constraineth us . . ." Dr. Sing gravelled up to Kuda Lumpur for a series of campaigns in that city and Ipoh, the centre of the tin-mining industry. Taiping, the old town with the lovely parks created our of disused ore-hearing pits, Sitiawan on the coast and Penang Island. Such life and vigour as the churches it these towns enjoy to-day can be traced in large measure to the ministry of God's servant. Everywhere one meets men and women who were just nominal church members until they found Christ as personal Saviour and Lord in Dr. Sing's meetings.

But the great preacher's health was giving cause for increasing anxiety. The cauthen vessel had begun to show signs of wear, Dr. Sung's medical history might have justified a lesser man in training himself as an invalid. There had been his recurring inherculosis of the hip and a heart none too strong; more recently, symptoms of more serious disease had occurred. Yet he had never spared himself. Campaign had followed campaign in quick succession and riverywhere John had preached three if not four times a day and given further time to personal interviews. Evan acute pain could not stop him fulfilling a preaching engagement. While in Penang on this last visit, he had once been carried on to the platform on a camp-cot, from which he preached through his interpreter. Already he stemed to know that he was a slowly dying man and he always said that he hoped to die on the platform.

He was back in Shanghai at the end of 1938. At home he would telax somewhat after the exertions of months. A lady Christian winker and friend of the family who had just arrived in Shanghai called at the Sing home one day with a giel who had interpreted for the evangelist on occasions. Dr. Sung was deep in a newspaper and did not even look up when the gnests entered? Mrs. Sung hought in tea and hisruits, but it was not until the paper had been completely peritted that be pir it down and joined in the conversation? Such behaviour su prised many a devoted admiter. Once during a campaign in Authwei Province the vetnian evangelist and Bible teather Pastor Hieh Meng-rei had called on John Sung hoping to discuss ways in which the might help in the follow-up work of the campaigns in his province. He had never met the tenowned dortor of science, who, in his turn, had probably never heard of Pastor Hsieh. Dr. Sung himself answered the door, and Pastor Hsieh, not recognizing him, asked counteously, "is Dr. Sung at home?" "I am Dr. Sung! What do you want to see me for?" was the cutt reply. Pastor Hsich stated his errand, but instead of his suggestion receiving the symparbetic consideration he expected, the rough response was: "That's no business of mine. That's God's affair!" Very crestfallen, the representative of an older and more enquette-conscious generation of evangelists apologized and hastily rook his leave. If there is a temptation to condemn what seems to be such un-Christian conduct, we should at least remember that the pain and weakness which had dogged Dr. Sung's steps most of his life were increasing and certainly account in part for the irritableness which made him so hard to live with.

From Thailand, meanwhile, had come urgent requests from the That churches there to pay a remm visit, this time to the non-Chinese churches. Thus it was that in January, 1930, Dr. Sung said goodbye once agam to his family and started off for Bangkok, where he was the guest of Miss McCord of the Presbyterian Mission. Other guests were Mr. Ming Te-fang and the Rev. Boon Mark Gitesam, who had acted as Dr. Sung's host on the first visit. The planned itinerary took Dr. Sung as far north as the railhead town of Chiengmai, second city of Thailand: also to Lampang in the north; then to Nacon Pathom and Petchahuri, The pattern of the meetings was much the same as on the previous visit and the results which were now expected followed

Mr. Boots Mark recalls how the simplicity of Dr. Sung's dress and demeation at once attracted the Siamese Christians. But what struck Mr. Boon Mark was that "he talked least, preached more and prayed most". His message was the simple gospel of sin and forgiveness preached with convicting power. People wept and cried out under deep conviction of six and many were converted. The minacles of healing of which reports had reached Thailand from China were repeated in Thailand. Mr. Boon Mark speaks of blind made to see, the lame walking, the damb recovering their speech and many kinds of sickness healed. He affirms that these cases were gennine and permanent. As usual, an evangelistic organization was left behind with hundreds pledged to go out in small teams once a week to witness. Once the initial reluctance and diffidence had been overcome it was the testimony of many that they found a joy never known before in this service and once a week was increased to twice or three times a week.

hi the twenty years between 1915 and 1935 the number of church members in connection with the Presbyterian Church in Thailand had decreased from 8,000 to less than 7,000. Two years after the times of revival associated with Dr. Sung's visits, church membership had gone up to 9,000. During the Japanese occupation many church leaders were arrested and imprisoned. Some of them denied the Lond. But thanks to the revival the church as a whole had experienced, there was no general spiritual decleusion.

Dr. Sung's work made less impact on the Thai (Siamese) Church than on the Chinese Church and the evangelistic organization of the That churches ceased to function during the war except in the case of a few independent churches. "Nevertheless, the memory of the great revival", writes Mr. Boon Mark, "is still in many hearts now and to-day. Thank God for Dr. Sung. He must be one of the happiest men in Heaven because he has led many souls, and those souls went to heaven continually.

They thank God and they thank Dr. Sing. Hallehijah, Amen!"

In 1940, Miss McCord was in the United States and ther a Thai doctor who was taking a post-graduate course in Baltimore. Was had broken our with Japan and Thailand had been invaded.
Miss McCord asked the doctor: "Do you think the church of Christ in Thailand will survive this war?"
"Yes", he replied; "but only because of the work of Dr. Sung!"

CHAPTER TWENTY-TWO

The Uttermost Parts

BY the end of 1938, the Japanese Army was well in control of East China. Coastwise traffic was regular and international shipping was reaching Shanghai and Tientsin normally. But it was impossible to undertake evangelistic itineraries in the interior.

If the vision Dr. Sung had had at the time of his father's death was to prove true, Dr. Sung had only two more years of active ministry left to him. And there was still one extensive area in the Pacific which he had not yet visited and where there were numerous Chinese—the Netherlands East Indies, Holland's well-governed and prosperous colony inhabited by 60,000,000 people. Most of these were Malay Muslims, but there were numerous colonies of Chinese throughout Java, Samatra, Borneo, the Celebes, Bali and the Lesser Sunda islands. Some of these were peranakans, or "children of the country" who had intermatried with the Malays and adopted their language, dress and customs, while other recent arrivals from China were called hsinkehs, or "new guests" who were less at home in the Indonesian language and remained distinct in other ways. The Chinese of the Indies were energetic and everywhere prominent in the commercial world. Much of the wealth of industry and trade was in their hands. Among them were some 5,000 Christians, There had been outstanding Chinese leaders in the churcher in Batavia, Koedocs, Bangil, Macassat, Djapara and New Grinea, and there were Chinese students in the Higher Theological School at Batavia. For many years the Dutch mistionary societies had conducted mission work among the Chinese and there were some fifty schools for Chinese children scattered through the islands.

The Chinese-speaking groups preferred to invite preachers from China to be their pastors and these were closely connected with Chinese church to ganizations. It was possibly through this means that Dr. Sung received his invitation to visit the East Indies. And for the Chinese of the Indies be drained his last remaining strength. The seed of Gospel truth had been faithfully sown and now there was to be a mighty harvest.

Dr. Sung travelled from Singapore outhis first visit to Java by air, arriving at Surabaya in January, 1939. Miss Cottoelie Baarbé, a Dutch missionary in Central Java, was one of those who threw benefit wholeheartedly into the earnpaign. Being somewhat sceptical is to the value of senarional evangebrs, she was at first dibious about teports of Dr. Sung brought by a man who had heard him in China. But Miss Baarbé was persuaded to attend the first inceing of the first campaign in the great port city of East Java. It was held on a week day and a full church welcomed the stranger from China—a thin, turimpressive man in a white Chinese gown of inexpensive material, the famous lock of hair fulling over his forehead. Dr. Sung was flanked by two interpreters: one who interpreted into Malay and another to interpret into the most common local dialect.

The audience soon learned to sing in Malay one of Dr. Sung's choruses "Pulanglah, pulanglah!"—"Home! Home! come quickly home! Open are the arms of God, waiting to welcome you home." Then the audience was invited to stand and ask God's blessing, each praying aloud for himself. These Presbyterians were not used to this new method of prayer, so Dr. Sung led the audience in a sentence-by-sentence prayer, the people repeating the peayer after him. Those who had come without Bibles were treed to bring them next time, and buy one if they did not possess such a thing! The story of the lost sheep from Luke xv. was then read and attention called to the opining sentence: "Then drew near unto Him all the publicans and sinners for to hear Him...." Verse by verse the story was expounded with a masterly and graphic dramadization of the story, illustrated on the blackboard with line sketches. At intervals the story was punctuated with the chorus, "Pulanglaht Pulanglaht ..." With humon he mimicked the various types of men and women who were lost: the dandy, the gaily dressed girl, the corpulent business-man, the cinemagor, the respectable church-goer and the religious hypocrite. The audience rocked with langhter. Then suddenly the preacher became personal and the message was applied. No one could evade the appeal. Hands began to go up, slowly at first, then in increasing numbers. The preaching had been with the Holy Ghos and much conviction. And everyone was unged to kneel and make a complete confession of sin, A deep impression was made and John unged the andience to attend all the meetings arranged. He said that there would be twenty-two altogether, when the entire Gospel would be presented. No one could afford to miss a single meeting of there would be a gap in the message which God had

The local residents warned Dr. Sung that, while meetings in the afternoon and evening were all right, no one would be free to attend morning meetings. He disagreed and won the argument; for he must, he said, cram all his messages into one week. He could not stay longer and lie could not leave out even one of the messages God had given him to deliver. He had his way, And to the amazement of everyone, the Chinese closed down their shops and came to church every morning. This was a miracle indeed and quite evidently the power of God was at work. The second sermon was on the power of the Blood of Christ and to one could make the Cross of Christ as real as Dr. Sung. The story of the Crucifixton was told with reverence and drama and a solemn high came over the listeners. Each one saw Christ dying there for his sins, bearing the punishment be deserved. One unforgettable sermon was on the thirteenth of First Corinthians in which Dr. Sung contrasted his own past history and all of which he had to boast with the infinite love of Christ—compassionate, long-suffering, full of mercy. What an abyss between our boasting and His silence, our pride and His humility, our vanity with His simplicity, our schi-secking with His self-denial, our suspicion of others with His faith in men, our self-righteous superiority over those who fall with His sorrow for the sinner. Yes! each one of us deserved crucifixion. But Christ, the perfect, spotless, sinless One was crucified in our stead!

So the message unfolded, three times a day, each meeting lasting from two to tluce hours: the New Birth; Repentance; the Fullness of the Holy Spirit; the Living Water; the Return of Christ and Christian service. With meisrve power, the motives and springs of the human heart were uncovered. The surgeon's knife probed deeply. There came a universal desire to get rid of all sin. Opportunity was given at every meeting to confess sin, both to God and to man. Restitution was taught and the necessity of putting right every wrong and adjusting every human relationship was continually arged on all. Confession of sin was followed by the reception by faith of the life of Christ, the Holy Spirit Himself.

Dt, Sung had neither time nor strength for personal interviews but he invited letters to which he always replied personally. He asked for written testinenies and a photograph from every convert for whom he midertook to pray. However late Dt, Sung was kept up at night dealing with correspondence, he was always up at 4.0 or 5.0 a.m. to spend hours on his kneest reading his Bible and praying. His interpreter the Rev. Ye Tjin Sin of the British and Foreign Bible Society, bears witness to this fact. What else could explain the power released through the use of the now time-honouved illustrations of the charcoal stove for the power of the Spirit, the ditry timbles which could not receive the pure water of the Holy Spirit, etc? Preachet and elders as well as the men, women and children in the pow were humbled as they realized how their divided hearts, their worldly walk and their powedess prayers had robbed them of the full power of Prutecost.

D1. Stug offered to lay bands on any who had thoroughly confessed all known sin and who desired to be filled with the Spitit. As this was done Miss Baarbé describes the scene as resembling a sea of joy and holy enthusiasm sweeping over the sublinese.

But this sea was to be rhunnelled into useful endeavour. The time had come to present the claims of those without Christ. The enthusiasm must not be dissipated in more emotion. There were millions who knew not Christ. Who would go and them? At once! There was a tremendous response and immediately the volunteers were organized into the usual teams of three. Triangular banners bearing a red cross and the name and number of the team were hastily made and the very next day scores of bands were out witnessing to friends, in schools and in hospitals. They were to come back and report results at once, And so the fust of the Java evangelistic bands were organized. Dr. Sung promised that later he would tettert and hold a ten days' training class for the members of all the bands in Java. If there was no existing building big enough, then a special structure would have to be build!

Befine having Surabaya, Dr. Sing announced that these would be a meeting to pray for the sick. No one could attend who had not previously attended three days of meetings, and a signature from a minister was required to prove this. An entrinous crowd had gathered long before the start of the interting, the sick in front. There was an address on Jas. v.14-16. "Here is the elder of the church," said Sung, pointing to himself. "I come to you in the Name of the Lord, not in any power of my own I do not possess any magic influence in my hands. So expect nothing of me, but only of Him who stands by me, whose servant I am." Quoting the passages in Luke vii.22 and Mark xvi.18, Dr. Sung told how he had not always had the faith to pray for the sick and had only you through to faith through bitter struggle. "When for the first time in China I prayed for the sick I hardly dared open my cyts after the "Amen" of the prayer. Had the Lord heard? Had all this not been a daring presumption of mine? Should 1 not stand there as a chalatan in front of all those simple, believing people? Would it not have been better if I had left on this whole experiment? Oh, how ashamed now I am of those doubting thoughts! Incredible powers had been working and the uneting-place shook with the passe and thanksgiving of the people who had been delivered. Yet I cannot guarantee that you will all be healed. The Lord did not heal all the sick. He was not always allowed to intervene to heal the sick in His day. Flow much less then His servants!"

The sick then came or were bought to Dr. Sung on the platform. Kneeling, he anointed them each with oil and commanded the disease to leave the sufferer. The same afternoon a praise meeting was held, when those who had been healed gave their testimonies. One woman from Miss Baarhé's own village was clearly healed of a scrious disease and became a much-appreciated fellow worker in the gospel.

Never had any of those present at this first series of meetings seen anything like this outpouring of love for souls: intense, sacrificial, mutting. A tender affection bad grown up between the preacher and the people. Here was a true spiritual father who had begotten them in the gospel and who was prepared to bear them on his heart. Treasuring the promise of his return, the Chinese Christians and the missionaries who were left behind in Surabaya were determined to live as last as Christians are supposed to live—full of joy and the Holy Spirit. They had known so little of this lithesten.

Similar campaigns followed in Madiun and Solo, the twin cities in the heart of the cultural centre of Java; in the heart of the cultural centre of Java; in the heart of the cultural centre of the siland and, finally, in Baturia, the capital and the administrative centre of the Dutch colonial administration. The campaigns went on through February, following one another in quick succession. As many as 1,000 people attended some of his campaigns in the larger cities and the blessing poured out followed the same pattern as in Surayaha. In Batavia, the historic old Portuguese church was filled every night with 2,000 people. Forty-six bible study groups were fortued and 450 adults professed conversion. Dr. Van Dootn wrote: "It is like the revival in Wales." The Dutch missionaries were amazed that so frail a man, suffering from a heart complaint and other incipient diseases, could keep on travelling and working so mitemittingly.

Towards the end of March, 1939, John Sung returned to Shanghai on a little visit. In May he turned south again to Singapore to be present at the first graduation resemony of the Golden Link Bible School. At the same time he held two days of meetings for 400 leaders of the evangelistic bands before once more crossing to the mainland for several campaigns in the Malay States and in Paragraphs.

States and in Penang.

In August, 1939, the promised return visit to the Netherlands Indies took place. This time the tour began at Batavin, the capital, in the Portuguese Church. And there were the same scenes of enthusiasm attending the meetings as on the first visit. The whole Chinese community was stirred, and there can have been very few who failed to attend at least one of the meetings. One wealthy man with a home in the fashionable residential submb of Buitenzorg (Bogor), a man who was not a Christian, was so attracted by Dr. Song that he got someone to take him along and introduce him to the great preacher. He took with him a packet containing a very substantial gift of money, which he intended presenting to Dr. Sung. Bur Dr. Sung, with his ability to pierce beneath the surface of people, at once saw that the man was not converted. Instead of accepting the gift graciously, he threw it away without any regard for the usual courtesies of the Chinese race and carnestly exhorted the man to repent and turn to the Lord. Perhaps this incident illustraces as well as any Dr. Sung's utter disregard for money. Indeed, his host at Bogot, the scene of his next campaign, asked him on one occasion, what was the secret of his success as an evangelist. His answer was frank but revealing, and one which suggests the downfall of many who once promised well: "Be careful about money. Be careful about women. And he careful to follow where God leads; when the Lord calls He will open the door."

D1. Sung was held in Batavia (Djakacta) by the Immigration authorities for a few days, and was in consequence late for the opening of the Bogor campaign. He had paid a preliminary visit to Bogor and had not been impressed with the size of the church building. So a tent was erected on a tennis court to seat 2,000 people. The Rev. Beverley Ho, who had led the singing for D1.

Sung in Shanghai in 1930, did the preaching until Dr. Sung arrived. And ilien when Dr. Sung was dissatisfied with the interpreter and ordered him off the platform, Mr. Ho had to take his place! Dr. Sung was suffering at this time much pain and discomfort from his hip and had to support himself against something when preaching and apply hot dressings after every meeting. But he preached with as great power as ever. As soon as the appeal was given, people would come forward weeping, and about 900 people had given in their names before the end of the week. From the beautiful town of Bogor with its renowned tropical gardens, Dr. Sung went on to the north coast port of Cheribon (Tjirebon), the outlet for a well-irrigated, fettile plain where in the rice paddies the teaper is perenmally overtaking the sower. Harvest and seed-time continue through the whole year without distinction of seasons. At Semarang, further along the coast, there were again audiences of over 1,000 mostly Chinese, From Semarang the itinerary took Dr. Sung south across the waist of Java, atnong the volcanoes, first to Magelang and then to Poerworedjo. At Djocja, or Djocjakarta, there were again large crowds who wanted to hear Dr. Sung. He was now right in the midst of ancient Javan culture. Nearby were monuments of great antiquity, both of Hundrusm and Buddhism: the Prambanan temples and the Borohadur respectively. This was the city too which its the unhappy post-war struggle for independence was to become the revolutionary capital. Solo was also revisited. But the climax of this tour was reached on the return visit to Surabaya.

Throughout the campaigns the proposed ten-day training school in Sirabaya from September 19th to 29th had been announced and the intembers of the preaching hands had been tirged to attend. When Dr. Sing arrived he found an enormous bamboo mat shed to seat 4,000 persons already effected in a centrally situated location uear the large mosque. Loudspeakers had been installed, The co-operation of every Christian church had been enlisted, and the organizing committee was under the charmanship of a Christian factory-owner. Two thousand "volunteers" from all the cities of Java visited by Dr. Sung attended meetings every morning and evening. The subject was the Gospel of Mark, and the purpose was the instruction of those who were pledged to continue to spread the Good News throughout Java by means of the 500 newly organized evangelistic bands. The meetings every night were evangelistic and attracted the entire Chinese population of the city. It became the fushion to go and hear Dr. Sung. The meetings were given considerable publicity in the local Press. It was reported that the public opinion of the Chinese world was turned in favour of Christianity. There were many conversions, especially among the young people. Nightly over 5,000 people of many races and languages crowded the tent to overflowing to listen to the simple message of Christ and Him ctucified. The messages were not just about the Bible, but expositions of the Bible itself. In the teaching classes, Dr. Sung would go through chapter after chapter, verse by verse. He expounded the doctrines of sanctification, of being crucified with Christ, all the time curplusizing the urgent necessity of dealing honestly with all sin. At the after-meeting the kneeling enquirers would be asked, "Hands up anyone who has stolen from others! Hands down! Now hands up anyone who has quarelled with his wife or with her bushand! Hands down! Hands up anyone who has deceived his employer! Now are you willing to apologize and confess your sin openly to the one you have wronged? Do you promine?" Prayer followed and the meeting was dismissed to allow the people to act on their promise. The last evening meeting was given to proclaiming the Return of Christ. But before this event, the Christians were warned of much suffering and indeed the warning was given of wars which would certainly affect these peaceful islands. How true was this prophecy! And how evidently John Sting looked forward to incetting his Lord while warning all those whose names were not yet written in the Lamb's Book of Life!

As usual, the last morning meeting was one to pray for the sick. There was no hysteria, no excitment, but a calm bringing of all the blind, the lame, the disfigured and the diseased to God in the Name of Christ. Each one was required to register previously. There were definite cases of healing which were publicly witnessed and acknowledged by the people of the city.

Dr. S. A. van Hoogstraten and the Rev. H. A. C. Hildering attended the meetings and were deeply impressed. The latter had attended the first series of meetings in Surabaya more or less as a critical spectator, but when Di. Sung came the second time and when let saw the profound impact of Dr. Sung's message, he threw himself wholeheartedly into the campaign. However busy he was, nothing could keep him away from the meetings, and he experienced in his own life a deep renewing and shared in the great joy over a multitude of sinners repenting and turning to the Saviour. So great was the enthusiasm that many stayed in the hut all day from eight in the morning to cleven at night so as to be sure of a seat at all the meetings, 5,000 copies of the song book were quickly sold out and a new edition had to be printed.

What were the results of these campaigns! The Bible Society felt the first impact and there was an extraordinary demand for Bibles and Testaments. The local depot was soon out of stock in some editions in both Chinese and Malay, New stocks of the new translation of the Malay Scriptures were hastily ordered from Batavia. The long-term results were seen in greatly increased congregations, church buildings which either had to be rebuilt or enlarged to hold the crowds that began to attend, and in a demand for reinforcements of ministers. Java had had her day of opportunity, and Miss Baarbe, writing ten years later in 1949, and after years of enemy occupation, could report: "We dare say that the Chinese churches in Java are still alive to-day only through the blessing of the revival brought by Dr. Sung. Dr. Sung had not planned that his ministry should reach only the Chinese charebes, but this was virtually the case. The fact that Dr. Sing was himself a Chinese and that the invitation originally came from the Chinese community accounts for this. Malay Christians attended many of the meetings, but there seems to have been little impact on the Malay churches as a whole, although there were conversions both in east and west Java.

Invitations had reached Dr. Sung to visit Macassa in the Celebes and Ambon in the Moluccas, so on September 30th he boarded a ship at the Surahaya docks. Hundreds of Christians were on the quay to see him off. The joy expressed in the singing of hynna after hymn as the vessel pulled out was mingled with sorrow at saying "Farewell" to the man to whom the churches of Java owed so much.

There are many Chinese in Macassar and two large Chinese Christian cougregations. This is the town where Dr. Jaffray and the Rev. Leland Wang established the first headquarters of the Chinese Overseas Missionary Uniou, a Chinese missionary society for teaching the Chinese of all these islands. Dr. Sung was given a hearty welcome here and there was much blessing attending the

From Macassar, Dr. Sung sailed for Ambon in the Moluccas, an old Dutch colony where a large percentage of the population is nominally Christian. Ambou is the home of a stalwart race of soldiers and a missionary-hearted thurth. It is one of the original "Spice Islands" and still produces untury and cloves. But advance reports about Dr. Sung had atoused considerable prejudice against hiru. In particular, some members of the Clunch Council objected to the Rev. Hamel that Dr. Sung hald meetings to pray for the sick: "What a pity," was the frontial reply, "that sick people should be healed!" But in spite of all the opposition there was another wonderful victory in Ambon. A young woman schoolteacher wrote to the Rev. IL A. C. Hildering after the meetings:

"Drar Sir: I don't write to you to get another job, but to tell you about the great love of Christ which I feel in my heart. I want to testify about His wondrons love. It is Dr. Sung who gave me this precious pearl. He gave it not only to me but to hundreds of us. He has conched our hearts and changed them. Not Dr. Sung but the Holy Spirit did it, and now we turned our eyes to the Cross and to the Blood of Christ. The great love of Christ radiates out of Dr. Sung. From the beginning till the end I drank with eagerness of the living water he gave. During twelve days he continued his meetings and I went there immediately after school was over at three o'clock. How good Jesus is! I thank Him out of the deepest of my heart that Hr sent His servant to us, Now for me it is impossible to be silent. I simply have to give my testimony to everybody. Without difficulty Lise very early in the morning to read my Bible and to pray. Otherwise I was very lazy, but now I rise at five o'clock. The Lord changed me into a new creature. In my heart I always sing those wondrous songs such as 'In the Cross, in the Cross be my glory ever.' People we do not know stop us on the streets to greet us and to share drein joy about the treasures Dr. String brought to us. The Holy Spirit is working in our hearts so that we forget all about race and church. We are one in Christ. Dr. Sung has come to prepare us for the Coming of Christ, I feel so different. My eyes are closed now to the world. They are only fixed upon the Cross. For my Saviour I will testify and for I lim I will the."

Years of enemy occupation soon followed for all the East Indian islands. Many missionaries died in internment camps or were executed. But the revival which had come to the Chinese churches gave them an impetus which continued right through the war. The sufferings which abounded led many more to place their faith in Christ and the churches increased in strength and numbers. At the end of the war there were greater dangers to threaten the churches In the war of liberation, there were massacres of Chinese communities and trials of every kind. These events led to a growing independence of the Chinese churches from the Indonesian national church. But it was undoubtedly the influence of Dr. Simg's campaigns that had laid the foundations so securely that the Chinese churches were able to stand the successive shocks of war, civil war and persecution.

On November 13th, Dr. Smig arrived back in Singapore on what proved to be his last visit. A week's meetings were held for the three Fukien dialect churches, There were 349 conversions and another twenty-one preaching bands were added. Careless of the heat and the himidity and his own physical weariness, he preached three times each day and when the week was over set opt on yet another series of campaigns in the Malay States; he visited Bentong, Klang and Penang and held a week's meetings in each place.

His life of active service was almost done. He promised the Christians of Singapore to return in 1940, but when they said Goodbye this time at the wharf, it was for the last time.

CHAPTER TWENTY-THREE

Life of No Account

HAT weak body had for fifteen years been worked to the limit of its strength. With the Apostle, John Sung must often hove said: "I count not my life dear unto myself, so that I might finish my course with joy and the ministry which I have received of the Lord Jesus to testify the Gospel of the grace of God." That course was almost un. The allotted fifteen years had nearly expired.

In John's last meeting it Surabaya, he had to preach in a kneeling position to lessen the pain in his hip. On his return to Shanghai carly in 1940 the pain became more continuous and Miss Kao Shuchet, who often used to visit him, remembers how he frequently groaned with the pain. On a Sunday morning he used to gather some close friends around him, remembers how he frequently groaned with the pain. On a Sunday morning he used to gather some close friends around him, in his home and preach to them, chiefly about the Lord's work. After preaching for an hour of more toword pray. So long as he was preaching or praying he was unconscious of pain, but as soon as he stopped the pain returned. He teld people that this was the Lord's discipline for his bad temper; and indeed it was noticeable how his disposition seemed to change at this time. Instead of being apparently morose and uncommunicative, he used to hold a normal conversation with people, And he observed more closely some of the proverhial Chinese com tesies; his guests he would ceremonially escort to the door, for instance; and once, when he had guests for dinner from a certain district in Fukien, he called out to his wife (who, observing normal etiquette, remained in the kitchen), to come and serve the guests with an extra pair of chopsticks. This was a local custom which he had remembered and took the trouble to observe. And shortly before let left Shanghai for Peking, he was entertaining these same friends and called to his wife to prepare some mien (noodles) and eggs quickly. This is the food which locally was always given to those about to go on a long journey. Sut h thoughtfulness made a deep impression on the visitors who had not learned to expect such consideration from Dr. Sing.

The daily routine was unchanged: eleven chapters of the Bible read daily and much time given to earnest, exhausting prayer. His diary still took up much of his time. Often he wrote it himself, but there were times when his strength was not cootegl and he got his brother to do the weiging. And when he found his brother to slow a writer, he invited one of the students at the China Bible Seminary to write for hun. She was an Amoy girl and wrote fast, and used to go over to take dictation from Dr. Sung daily.

There was one last appearance in Shanghai in one of the large churches. The announcement that Dr. Sung would preach brought crowds from all over the city. "There was a ternible crush," said one who was present, "and I could hardly hear him. At the start everyone was talking, He came in and, walking to the table, banged on it with his first, asking loudly whether this was a theatte of a religious service. Dead silence fell. His message that day was based on I Thess. v.2: The Lurd so cometh as a thief in the night," "

His pain and weakness increased and after he was taken ill on November 15th, his doctor advised him to go immediately to the Peking Union Medical College. The P.U.M.C. was China's most famous medical institution and owrd much to the Rockefeller millions. It was clear that an operation was overdue. The patient had delayed again and again, but at last on December 4th, Dr. Sung left for Peking, leaving his wife and family in Shanghai, To his old friend, Mrs. Lucille Jones, who was seeing him for the last time, John said: "I have prayed for others: now others must pray for me."

In Peking, it was confirmed that he was suffering from cancer as well as utdirectedsis. A first operation was performed on December 14th, and a second on January 28th, 1941. Six months in the P.U.M.C. followed. Another patient in the hospital was the son of Mr. and Mrs. C. J. Glittenberg of the China Inland Mission.

who had brought the boy up from South China for surgical treatment. One day Mr. Wang Ming-tao, the pastor of the Christian Tabernack, was visiting both patients, and introduced Mr. and Mrs. Glittenberg to Dr. Sung. After that many chats were held in the sun-parlom of the hospital during Dr. Sung's convalencence from his operations. Dr. Sung spoke frankly of his own stubbornures and ill-humour and expressed his belief that it was for this that the Lord was disciplining him. Familiar with the many stories of this strange personality, Mr. Glittenberg was surprised to find one so chastened and meek, Medically the operations came six months too late. Dr. Sung had refused earliet advice to have an operation on the ground that he could not leave his work. The present treatment seemed to be successful, however, and on July 7th be was discharged and wrnt out to the Western Hills or the "Hills of Fragrance" as the Chinase brown them, to continue by convenees transcribed.

Chinese know them, to continue his convalescence.

On July 18th Dr. Sung received the news that his only living son Joshua had died in Shanghai. This scemed a cruel blow at such a time, but John knew His Lord too well to be offended in His ways. He found abundant comfort in the Scriptures and renewed his spirit as well as his strength amid the quiemess of the sun ounding hills and the changing brauty of the seasons.

Mrs. Sung and the three girls joined Dr. Sung in the Western Fills on August 26th, and they set up a new home there. As health slowly returned, John resumed a measure of work, Daily Bible Classes and meetings were conducted in the home. He continued to pray and to study the Bible with the old intensity. He wrote fifteen new hymns and nineteen open letters to Church and Evangelistic League leaders in China and in the "Nanyang", urging them to pray for revival.

By the autumn his health seemed to some degree restored and be was taking long walks over the neighbouring hills, making the round of the numerous temples and beauty spots. It was the season of the year when the "red leaves" drew the crowds out from the city to admire the brilliant autumn colouring in the Hunting Park of the formet Emperors.

It was in 1941 too that be composed his allegories, in which he wove a story around the various books of the Bible in allegorical style. His professed purpose was to teach the main lesson of each book. He was by now steeped in the Scriptures and had read widely books and commentaries about them. But he found little interest in the orthodox manner of teaching and expounding the Scriptures. Every evening the family and friends gathered together for worship, and it was then that these allegorical stories first came to light. He did not begin from the beginning of the Bible and go through it systematically, but chose the book which was specially in his mind. In the Introduction to the Allegories, Mrs. Sing desembes how Dr. Sung Itad no clear outline in his mind when he started. He chose a book; then he prayed and after that began, never knowing where he would end! He often said that it was like the wind of the Spicit which bloweth where it listeth. He claimed that the allegories were not mere invention, but were given to him by the Holy Spirit. They were carefully reported and it was Dr. Sung's hope that his three daughters would prepare them for publication. Many things delayed the work and it was not until July, 1951, that they were finally published. Mrs. Sung bears witness to the passionate love her husband had for the Word of God, and she suggests that there is little wonder that the light lie received from the Lord was different from that which others received, in view of the intense study of the Bible, while in the hospital in America.

The principle theme of the Allegories was the church and the church worker; how to build up a church, how to lead a church on in the spiritual life, what kind of labourers God needs to gather in His harvest, the character and personal life of an evangelist. He urged that only those who were well versed in the Scriptures and who had an experience of the crucified and risen life could meet the present-day needs of the Cluttch and complete the eternal plan of God. All these themes are interspersed through the Allegories and the Cross always holds the central place.*

Class or School, known as the Hall of Grace. There were no regulot students, but Christian workers who could afford the time came to stay for longer or shorter periods to sit at the feet of one whom tens of thousands had learned to love and respect. There was frequent fellowship with Mr. Wang Ming-tao, who continued his nucompromising witness in Japanese-occupied Peking, and with Pastor David Yang, who had moved his Team of Christian Workers from Shansi to Peking. The winter passed with its bitter cold and brilliant simshine. Bur John Sung's disease steadily gained the upper hand. Since he had been in Peking, Germany had attacked Russia and Japan Pearl Harbour, bringing the United States and Great Britain into the Pacific conflict. One by one the countries visited by Dr. Sung hecame involved in war: Hong Kong, Singapore, Indo-China, Siam, Malaya, the Philippines and the Netherlands East Indies. The burden of prayer for the suffering churches and Christians weighed heavily upon the man who was already in the habit of bearing them on his heart.

On March 27th, 1943, a third operation was performed in Tientsin. Three months later he was taken back to the Western Hills. But John Sung's days of active service were over. The fifteen Hills. But John Sung's days of active service were over. The fifteen years since his spiritual crisis in America had elapsed. The seven years foreseen at the time of his father's death were completed; and the son had no reason to regret that he had not preached the gospel with every ounce of his strength and every minute of his time. Now he could no longer lead meetings. Yet in his weakness he was visited by a constant stream of visitors from far and near. He prayed with each one and encouraged them to go on with the Lord. Many lives were blessed through these contacts.

In June, 1944, there was a turn for the worse, and this time the family took the patient to the German Hospital in Peking, where yet another operation was performed on the 12th. Devoted German sisters gave the patient the most loving can and there too John was visited by frequent visitors. One of them was the Rev. John Kii, a converted film acree who was conducting a mission in Peking. Due to the war, he had been separated from his wife and family for a long time. He had recently been expecting to be reunired with them when the tragic news reached him that the ship on which they were traveling from Shanghai had brea sunk with the loss of all on board. Crushed and broken-hearted, he felt that he could never preach again. Then he thought of Dr. Sing, dying of cancer in hospital and suffering such pain that at times he could not endure his bed and had to be taised off the hed in a large sheet suspended from the colling to gain any relief. John Kii decided to call on John Sing and to imburden his breaking heart. After listening to the story, John Sing said softly to the other John:

"We could sing a duet, couldn't we?"

John Kit was horrified, Sing! A duet! How could be ever sing again? And what could Dr. Sung sing?
"We could sing the song of Job", was the cabn reply. "You sing the first chapter and I'll sing the second!"

On July 1st John Sung returned to the Western Hills to spend his last days on earth with his family, in spite of increasing weakness and constant pain, he continued to spend most of his time in prayer and reading the Scriptures. He diciated to two devoted friends the results of his daily meditations in the Word of God and his reminiscences of the past. These two ladies, Miss Pi Yung-chin and Miss Lin Su-ching, were his daily companions in prayer and those times of intercession are indelibly written in their memories. Their lives were immeasurably enriched by those last days of fellowship and both became a powerful influence for God among generations of young people in the following years.

Dr. Sing's last message for the Church was almost prophetic: "The work of the future is to be the work of prayer!

This slogan was taken up by the Christian students of Peking in the post-war years when they were faced with changing political conditions and greater sufferings. It has inspired many to pray whose active service in China is now entailed. A letter from Peking, written in 1954 and quoting the words of God's servant, adds that minacles are still being wrought in answer to prayer,

On the morning of August 16th, 1944, John felt worse. He told his wife that God had shown him that he was going to die. That night he fell into a coma, but the next day rallied enough to sing verses of three bymns: "There's a land that is fairer than day", 'In the Cross, in the Cross be my glory ever" and "Jesus is all the world to me". As the day wore on the dying man scened to pass from intense pain into a great joy and peace. Close friends, such as Mr. Wang Ming-tao, as well as a doctor and a Christian nurse, were present. Mrs. Sung had prayed that her husband should not die at inght. About midnight, his last words to his wife were:

"Dun't be afraid! The Lord Jesus is at the door. What is there to four?"

It was daybreak when, at 7.7 a.m. on August 18th, at the age of forty-two, John Sung fell asleep. The circle of relatives and friends were quietly praying around the bed.

Mr. Wang Ming-tao quite naturally assumed responsibility for the funeral arrangements. At five o'clock on the same day, a service was held in the house and then the hody was lovingly placed in a casket of "fragrant wood". Mr. Wang spoke briefly and appropriately on the words in Rev. xiv.13: "Elessed are the dead which die in the Lord from henceforth: Yes, saith the Spirit, that they may jest from their labours; and their works do

The interment took place on August 22nd. Representatives from many clunches were present and a coach-load of friends came from Tientsin to attend. There were also delegates from Chefoo, Swatow, Amoy and Foothow. Some 300 persons were present altogether. Mr. Wang Ming-tao preached on Jer. i.4-19. He emphasized that John Sung had been called, like Jeremials, to rebuke the sins of the Church and of society, to be as an "iron pillar", fearing no man and faithful unto death. A great man had passed from their midst. Leaders of various evangelistic bands which he had inspired carried the coffin and hymns were sung all the way to the grave which had been prepared in the quiet treeshaded meadow where John had loved to go for solitude in prayet.

"IIAT went ye out into the wildeness to see? A reed shaken by the wind? But what went ye out for to see? A man clothed in soft raiment? Behold they that wear soft clothing are in king's houses. But what went ye out for to see? A propher?..."

John Sung died in the prime of life, when most evangelists look forward to their greatest triumphs. He had only fifteen years of active service. Yet his influence in China and among the Chinese communities and churches in South-East Asia was

Chinese communities and churches in South-East Asia was tremendons. Ten years after his death, the results of his work still stand as a monument to his memory,

What was the secret of his extraordinary success? Certainly he was no reed shaken by the wind. Given an unpopular message to proclaim, he proclaimed it without showing fear or favour, Nor was he a man of courdy manners and well-tailored clothes. He would have been quite out of place in kings' houses, Like the Baptist, he was rough in appearance and fingal in his habits. Money and popularity meant nothing at all to him. He was a scholar and hoperacty because forming as an 6 min. He was a scholar and had mingled with the learned and estudies. But there was nothing in his message or in its presentation to attract the bitellectuals. His appeal was to the common people. But what wern ye out for to see? Certainly a man who was scrupulous with himself. Nothing was allowed to hinder his prayers. Was it a snack for which he had neglected to pay, or a private note to his wife slipped in to a letter which he was forwarding, thereby defrauding the Post Office of a samp? He could not rest until the matter had been put right. He was particularly careful about money and resolutely refused all proffered gifts.

In spite of first impressions, John Sung was a humble man, He never made a parade of his unusual attainments. Had he been asked, "Who are drou?" he might well have replied, "Merely a voice!" He invariably signed himself as "the least of the Lord's servants". He resented rather than invited the praise of men. The message was always more prominent than the man.

Theo John Sung was a man of the Word. He loved it passionately. He knew the Bible as few know it. He read little else and he continued so to read right up to the end. His own preaching was essentially expository and Biblical. His fiercest denunciations were for those who had departed from lovalty to God's Word.

He was undoubtedly a man of prayer. He rose very early in the moming to pray. A well-nigh interminable list of his converts and, if possible, their photographs was his inseparable companion and, if possible, their photographs was his inseparable companion and, if possible, their photographs was his inseparable companion and he prayed for them all regularly, often with tears. Every where he went he laid emphasis on the urgent need to pray. That the Chinese Church is a praying Church to-day can be attributed in part to the influence and the example of this man who prayed.

John Sung was also an intensely industrious man. He could never waste a minute Every available moment of the day, whether on a joinney or engaged on one of his campaigus, he used to study and write. He laboured as a man whose days were supplied.

John Sung was outstandingly a burning light. He was conscious of having a mission to fulfil, and this consciousness was accompanied by a tremendous travail of soul. On the platform, his was a fervour of a rare kind—a sort of incandescence, Nothing mattered to him but to declare the Word of God. He made no attempt at impressive advertising, yet the zeal of a man on fire attracted the multitudes.

Then, undoubtedly, it was God's appointed time. The hour had snuck for the Church of China. And God sought a man whom He could use. He found (among others) John Sung.

could use. He found (among others) John Sung.

But what went ye out for to see? First and foremost, a man interly abandoned to God. Gifts, attainments, honours, prospects, wealth—all counted loss and consumed in one increvable sacrifice. His was an unqualified consecration of his all to God. Nothing was kept back. The sacrifice, moreover, was bornd with cords to the altar for the fitll duration of his life. There was never a moment of regret. No lowering of standards. No compromise with self. Just a daily denial of self. His was no easy ministery. But he had a Spirit-given ability to give himself wholeheartedly to it. He was wedded to the Cross. He gloried in the Cross. Not for him a comfortable, rador-made career—a post suited to his training and attainments. He recklessly formook all to follow His Lord. With all his superficial faults and idiosyncrasies, he was a man after God's own heart,

DR SUNG SHANG-CHIEF, GOD'S REVIVAL MESSENGER, TO THE CHINESE CHURCH OF THIS GENERATION

RECENTLY a Christian sister gave me a copy of Dr. John Sung's recoully published Bible Allegories. As I read it, my milist recalled this present generation apostle of revival. I scenned to see him standing there before me with his look of hair tumbling over his forethead, his cotton gown barely coming below his knee, his traping voice earnestly, desperately pleading with souls deugged by sin and sleeping the skeep of death to awake. The dry bones lyved and became a mighty army. Ah yes, Dr. Sung is certainly to be remembered as a faithful servant of Christ.

I. He preached the pure doctrine of salvation

I. He preached the pure doctains of salvation

Dr. Sung was a dector of philosophy in chemistry. Yet he never coalted his acholarship, nor took advantage of his great reputation. He simply exalted the Cross and preached the old truths of salvation through the shed Blood of Christ. He never boasted of any superior spirituality not did he endeavour to give the impression that he was in any way a great leaden or cryinglist of that he was a cryibly birsy man. He simply and humbly witnessed to the grace of God and with love born at Calvary pleaded with souls in the darkness of sin. He preached a balanced message and never laboured any particular aspect of truth. He just preached the orthodox doctrines of salvation, regeneration, justification and boliness. These were the truths his generation needed. The lost were born again and defeated Christians were revived. lost were born again and defeated Christians were revived.

2. He consageously attacked sin within the Church

With regard to sin within the Church, Dr. Sung never hesitated to expose it and to surge repensance on Christians. He quite unceremoniously attacked the present day Pharisers and hypocrises among the clergy. He never spared anyone's feelings as he penetrated the false mask of those who were merely preaching for a living. He nuhesitatingly exposed what was rotten in the ways of the world and of Christians and he condemned the deceicfulness of the human heat. He was a club aimed at the head of all who were sleeping the sleep of mendragged by sin. He was an alarm sapal to all who were immersed in the empty pleasures of this world. The Hoty Spirit used this faithful servant to revive the Church of Chitta and to show Christians the most for a separated life. The Church of to-day sadly needs many more preachers like him who will uncompromisingly attack sin and world-lines.

3. He did a work of genuine revival

3. He did a work of genuine revived

When we examine the history of severals in the church, we discover that true revival is nothing more nor less than the element of the church as a result of separatine from sin This always results in a zeal to save sinters by the preaching of the Gospel. Dr. Sung's work kept strictly to this track. He never need his success to create a new demonitation, but encouraged the Christiant in every rity, tegardless of their denominations, to organize evangelistic bands. He exhorted their members to determine to go out witnessing at least note a week in order to introduce Christ to infedievens. The writer was once a member of one of those bands and I can never forget Dr. Sung's advice when going out to witness. He triged us not to separate from the churches, however much unspiritual leaders might hinder or persecute. Unless duven to it, we should not leave the churches, but faithfully witness for the I ord and the Lord would protect His children. The writer h happy to say that he has continued to serve the Lord within the framework of the Church. Dr. Sung's words in this connection made a deep unprecision on me.

the framework of the Church. Dr. Sung's words in this connection made a deep impression on me.

To-day the evangelistic organization in such places as Canton and Hong Kong and Arnoy has dissolved but there are many faithful, wincesting Christians who continue to work for the Lord. I am creatin that the Gold who seeth in secret will reward those faithful ones together with this servant Dr. Sung. Recently the writer has been able to observe in the Philippines and neighbouring countries that the evangelistic organizations are still functioning. There is mercover a plan to erect a memorial chapel to Dr. Sung in Singapore.

What has been written above are facts which many eyes have wimessed personally. But Dr. Sung was not only a man who was faithful in his public work. He was none the less faithful in the hidden ministry at the Throne of Grace. He was a faithful interceisor. He ministry at the Throne of Grace. He was a faithful intercersor. He received countless letters requesting prayer in every place he visited. He kept every such request accompanied by a photograph and remembered each in prayer regularly. His memory was phenomenal. The Rev. Sn Tso-yang recalls meeting Dr. Sung in the province of Kiangsu. As soons as Mr. Su amounted his name, Dr. Sung at once recollected that he had nince led in prayer in a meeting in Houg Kong. Were it not that Dr. Sung had all these names constantly before him, how could be have remembered one name annotages many? Thus Dr. Sung was not only a faithful and bold prophet but he was also a time priest, one who interceded for souls. And here we can see the reason why Gud so used him.

one who microceae us sould that the trainers about him worthy of caudation, but just these outstanding qualities have been mentioned. Though it is impossible to write of them in detail, it is clear that Dr. Sung's influence on the Chinese Church of this generation is meakfulable. May the Lord raise up to-day many more Dr. Sungs!

APPENDIX TWO

Dr. Sung's Last Instructions about the Preaching Band Organization in Singapore

O-DAY I have gathered you specially to talk to you about several things concerning the Singapore Christian Evangelistic League. I hope you will take note of and carry on what I say;

(A) "Forsake not the availabling of yourselves ingether"

All members and officials of the League should form the habit of attending the monthly meeting of members. District representatives should make it their husiness to encourage a full attendance by all old and new members. This telidatity is the foundation of work for the

(B) Be united and keep pouring in the oil

(a) Be since an ever puring in our on.

A lack of unity and the failure to pour in the oil are our twin eneruses. Disunity tobs us of strength, if you do not add the oil, the lamp cannot give light. We ought to be united in Christ. Our one and only aim and object should be to lift high the Cross and proclaim the Count of Superior.

only aim and object should be to lift high the Cross and proclaim the Gospel of a Savnour.

1. Firmfail unity. Every League membes should give his contribution to his district representative who will pass on such contributions to the League Treasure. This money must be used solely for the purchase of tracts. Unity in financial matters shows we are united to Christ.

2. Responsibility of District Representatives. District representatives should gather together all members in his district once a week to encourage one another hy giving and histening to reports of the work.

3. Propose of monthly League meetings of efficers. There must be a monthly meeting of officers to promote the spirit of contrad-ship and for nutual encouragement. More time should be given to prayer than to discussion.

to discussion.

to discussion.

4. General meeting of League members. Such incretings are limited to two a year. The decernions of the ball should be artistic. The order of service should be well planned. For example: one district might be asked to provide testimomes, another to sing and a good speaker to give a five-minute message. The Scripture Lesson and the hymns should be carefully chosen and members who have died should be remembered. The meeting place should be thesen in each district in rotation. Where the districts are small, several could unite to borrow a suitable place. When the turn of each district comes round, the local members must be responsible for arranging the hall, preparing refreshments, etc. Refreshments should be economical, the important thing being the followship and the mutual love, not the food.

(C) No district may hold unauthorized or too frequent gatherings

It is important for every district to ensure suitable speakers at their meetings. Do not act independently, but in a spirit of comradeship. Every attempts, should extractly study the Bible and zealously witness. Wherever advisable, the Brongelistic League may arrange a convention for the deepening of the spicitual life of members, but special care must be taken in inviting speakers (on no account invite anyone whose dectrinal helicit are unsound!), lest division be introduced. You can't die of hunger, but you certainly can of poison!

(D) Preaching halls

(D) Preaching halls

1. Name. The name given to such halls should be the stame of the local district (e.g., a hall set up by the East Singapore district would be called the East Singapore District Preaching Hall).

2. Independence. Such halls should preserve their independent character, Finance should be directed by the District representative without depending on any outside help. To relanquish your own responsibility is to allow your hard work to come to nonght. Whene a district is mall, it may join with other small districts in setting up a preaching hall. Our aim and object is to lead many to Christ and to receive the blessing of God.

The League President may control all the affairs of every district and should pay special attention to questions of second obstrine. The Treasure should present a monthly account of receipts and expenditure. I commit to the League the rights of my book of thouses. The main purpose of what I have said to-day is to ensure that you will never case to co-operate closely and to shine brightly. I hope you will press forward vigorously and lead many to be saved and the Lord's Name to be glorified!
